ULGER DUPART,
JOHN GARSTKAMP.

MINORITY REPORT.

Committee Rooms,
New Orleans, July 27, 1868.

To the Honorable House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana:

I fully concur with bill reported by the majority of the committee, with all the amendments added, with the exception of section nineteen, to which I offer the following amendment.

To strike out after the word "the" in the second line all the third and fourth, and insert instead "police jury of each parish, and the Council of each incorporated city or town shall appoint," for the following reasons:

1. That the bill as originally printed confers too much power in the hands of the Board of Registrars, contrary to all Republican principle of government.

2. That in order to mete out proper justice to the whole mass of the people of the State, the proper parties to appoint the Commissioners are the juries of parishes and Councils of any incorporated city and town, who, while acting in conjunction with the Board of Registrars, will insure proper satisfaction to the people of the State of Louisiana, irrespective of race or color.

All of which is submitted, and I ask the adoption of the bill as amended and reported by the majority of the committee, with the amendment offered above by myself.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. Yorke, of Carroll, chairman of the Committee on Elections and Qualifications, submitted the following majority report, which was received and accepted:

To the Speaker and Members of the Honorable House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana:

The Committee on Elections and Qualifications, appointed by your honorable body, beg leave to submit the following as their report:

As chairman and member of the committee on Elections and Qualifications, appointed by your honorable body, that in the case of the Fourth Representative District of the parish of New Orleans, from the evidence produced before your committee we are of opinion that gross frauds were allowed and perpetrated by the commissioners of elections and others in said district, as proven by the evidence now before your honorable body, and the neglect or inability of Messrs. Heidenhain and Hall to prove that they would have received a majority of votes if a fair election had been allowed and we are of opinion that the election in said district should be declared null and without effect, and that the Governor be instructed to order a new election in the above mentioned district.

Respectfully submitted,

P. JONES YORKE,
Chairman;
DENNIS BURREL.

Mr. Pratt, of Claiborne, submitted the following minorty report, which was received:

MINORITY REPORT.

To the Honorable Speaker and House of Representatives, of the State of Louisiana:

The undersigned, member of the Committee on Contested Elections, begs leave to submit the following minority report:

I dissent from the report of the majority in the case of Heidenham and Hall against Zacharie and Stringer, for the following reasons:

1. The contestants having abandoned the ground of ineligibility on the part of the incumbents, base their claims on fraud practiced to such an extent that a majority of legal votes in their favor have been counterbalanced by fraudulent votes. This the contestants have utterly failed to sustain by proof. Messrs. Zacharie and Stringer received, according to the returns, a majority of fifty-seven for Stringer and thirty-three for Zacharie over the highest contestant, Heidenhain, and a majority of nearly double these figures over Hall, the other contestant. To prove fraudulent voting the contestants produce affidavits of only twenty-seven persons claiming that they were illegally deprived of the right of voting. Now, granting that these facts were true, both contestants have failed to prove that this number would have been sufficient to elect them, as this number of votes, if added to their vote, would still give Messrs. Zacharie and Stringer a majority of six for Zacharie, and of thirty over the highest contestants for Stringer. But the incumbents have proved by the face of the affidavits that eight of these affiants were not entitled to vote in the Fourth Representative District, while nine others fail to show what ticket they would have voted had they voted, thus showing that seventeen of the affiants fail to show that these votes would have been polled for Heidenhain and Hall, leaving only ten affidavits which would show that they would or could have voted for the contestants. One affidavit of H. J. Campbell shows that he believes from forty to sixty persons were illegally deprived of the right of franchise; but aside from the fact that affiant fails to show that he knew each of these voters, and that they were refused the right of voting, this testimony must be taken with proper grains of allowance, inasmuch as affiant was himself a candidate, and as such biased and prejudiced in his own favor, and the same affidavit was used in his own behalf.

2. The incumbents have shown that more fraud was perpetrated by the contestants than they themselves charge was used in favor of the incumbents. It was distinctly proved by the affidavits of two persons, Davis and Spalding, that Heidenhain endeavored to obtain a hundred blank certificates of registration, to which he said he would forge the signatures of the registrars, and use them at the election ; that he furthermore showed some fifteen registration certificates belonging to dead men and absentees, which he would use for himself in the election. It is furthermore proven that Heidenhain hired a party to go to one of the polls in the Fourth Representative District, and as he got the Democratic ballots from the box that he should erase the names of Zacharie and Stringer ; that the party afterward went to another poll in the same district, and found Heidenhain himself striking out the names of Zacharie and Stringer as they were taken from the box ; that he saw Heidenhain strike these names from the ballots in the same way ; that Heidenhain took him aside and asked him what he had done at Seven's House, when Davis replied that he had struck off the names of his opponents from some thirty ballots, and that Heidenhain was all right, when Heidenhain said that he would reward him (Davis) with a place in the Customhouse, as he had promised toat "he would remember him;" thus showing frauds to a larger amount than what the contestants even claim against the incumbents.

The undersigned, therefore, claims that instead of showing that fraud prevailed to such an extent that Heidenhain and Hall procured a majority of legal votes, it has been established by the proof that Messrs Zacherie and Stringer were elected by a larger majority than their majority as reported in the return of the elections, and that the parties contesting were immediately and directly parties to the fraud perpetrated in their own favor; wherefore, the undersigned asks that Messrs. Stringer and Zacharie be given their seats, to which they are duly elected, and that this House shall not consult partisan feelings to warp their judgment in giving fair and impartial justice in this case.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

C. B. PRATT.

Your Committee on State Library beg leave to report that with the assistance of the Secretary of State, we are now engaged in taking an inventory of the books contained in the State Library, and at as early a day as possible will furnish full and correct information concerning the same. We are reliably informed that the room now occupied by the Committee on Enrollment is the one where the library properly belongs, it having been temporarily removed to its present location for safety while the recent repairs were being made to Mechanics' Institute. We are of the opinion that the library as at present located is very inconvenient for members of the General Assembly and others, and recommend its immediate removal to the room formerly used for that purpose, and at a proper time will introduce a resolution to that effect.

Poetry.

"NEARER HOME."

One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er:
I'm nearer home to-day
Than I ever have been before.

Nearer my Father's house,
Where the many mansions be;
Nearer the great white throne,
Nearer the Jasper sea;

Nearer the bound of life,
Where we lay our burdens down;
Nearer bearing the cross,
Nearer wearing the crown.

But lying darkly between,
Winding down through the night,
Is the dim and unknown stream
That leads at last to the light.

Closer, closer my steps
Come to the dark abysm,
Closer, death to my lips
Presses the awful chrysm.

Savior, perfect my trust,
Strengthen the might of my faith,
Let me feel as I would when I stand
On the rock of the shore of death;

Feel as I would when my feet
Are slipping over the brink;
For it may be I'm nearer home,
Nearer now than I think.

HE WENT TO SEEK HIS FORTUNE.

He went to seek his fortune, girls,
And such a search had he:
He wandered East—he wandered West
By land, and mount, and sea;
When every shore he'd traveled o'er,
And proved how vain to roam,
He turned about where he set out,
And found it nearer home!
Away from shore and sea;
For Fortune's gate is fixed as fate
Till woman finds the key.

So I became his fortune, girls,
His dearest wealth in life;
And oft he's told the best of gold
Was in a careful wife!
He wonders yet how he could set
On such a quest to roam:
For 'tis confessed that Fortune's chest
Is ever found at home!
Is ever found at home, my girls,
Away from shore and sea;
Though Fortune's box had double locks
We girls would find the key!

Washington Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, October 8.

Rev. Dr. Gurley, of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, "fell asleep" on Wednesday morning, at eight o'clock. His remains were interred in Glenwood Cemetery, on Saturday afternoon. The funeral services were very imposing and of more than ordinary solemnity. At the house, before the procession started, the Scriptures were read and prayer offered: the corpse was then removed to the church, preceded by some fifty ministers, in carriages. The coffin was placed before the pulpit where the deceased had so faithfully ministered for fifteen years. On the lid of the coffin there was a beautiful floral decoration, combining the Cross, the Anchor, and the Crown. The pulpit was covered with sackcloth; the arch and columns of the recess were draped in mourning, and festoons of flowers; and on the rear wall of the recess were placed large letters of evergreen forming this touching sentence: "Behold how we loved him." After reading the Scripture, singing and prayer, an able and appropriate discourse was delivered by Rev. Dr. Edwards, of Cannonsburg, Pennsylvania. He presented the early history and struggles, and also the triumphs of Dr. Gurley, in reaching the exalted position he occupied. As a type of American men he was held up for the imitation of every youth; he was a faithful pastor, a man of great prayer, and devout, and earnest in his ministrations. Dr. Sundeland also delivered an address touching more particularly the last hours of the deceased. Those were hallowed hours—such as only the righteous realize; the glorious Gospel of the blessed God, he had so faithfully preached to others, was his strength and shield in the trying hour: faith in the atonement opened to him the grandest visions of the future glory.

"Servant of God, well done," was sung as the closing hymn, when the coffin-lid was raised and the vast audience in slow and solemn procession passed by and gazed for the last time on the features of their devoted pastor. A long train of carriages followed the remains to Glenwood Cemetery; here the burial service was read, a prayer offered, the hymn "Asleep in Jesus," was sung most impressively, the benediction pronounced, and "Dust to dust concludes the noblest song!"

In connection with these services, two facts may be mentioned—there was no Episcopal preacher present, and of the six Methodist preachers present, no one was asked to take part in the exercises nor offered a seat in the pulpit with other ministers; besides, the Presbyterian ministers of both branches, who officiated, there was one Lutheran (the only one present), and three Baptists. Of course there was no design to neglect the Methodist ministers or to be deficient in courtesy toward them, yet it was done as effectually as if designed, and is suggestive of this fact—that in in the minds of our sister Churches, the Methodist ministers occupy a position outside of fraternal courtesy except where there is some hard work to do; then they are included in the programme. It is most fortunate for the Methodists that they have no favors to ask and no duty to shun.

A remarkable woman has, since my last, closed her earthly career—Miss Mary Jackson.

Rattlesnake Springs, located in Montgomery County, Maryland, though not very musical in sound nor in name calculated to inspire delight, is, nevertheless, in Methodist history in this section, a point of great interest; remarkable for the extraordinary success and power of the camp meetings held there in the first quarter of this century. It is probable that upon no single spot has there been concentrated more of the might and eloquence of the Methodist Church ministers than at these Springs during the camp meetings held there. At the one held in 1821, Miss Mary Jackson was converted—the first of a large family and larger circle of acquaintances, she at once became the centre of a wide-extended religious influence. Her two sisters, the Mrs. Thomas and Colonel John Berry, were converted at the same time, also Mr. Thomas Berry and Colonel John were brought to a clearer view of divine things. These brothers removing to Baltimore, became leading and useful members of the Church; they filled well the measure of their duty, and though gone to their rest, their name lives and their works follow.

Miss Jackson remained at the homestead, in the neighborhood of "Old Federal Church;" she and another sister formed the class; her brother, Colonel Jasper Jackson, used to accompany her to class, but not being a member, could not, according to the rule, be admitted beyond three times, so he waited outside till service was over; this continued sometime, when he, witnessing the steadfast devotion and blameless life of his sister, became also a member, then another, and another, till only one of a family of twelve children, remained unconverted. A camp meeting was held near the home of this family, and on its site "Pisgah" church was erected, chiefly by their contributions: in 1860 it was laid in ashes by the torch of the incendiary: another was built in a new location, at Miss Mary's suggestion, that as she was confined to the house by a fractured collar bone, she might look from the window and see the church as it progressed. At its dedication she directed those in charge of the services to receive what the neighbors might willingly contribute, and she would clear the building of debt! But this was doomed; as the representative of the "Old Baltimore Conference," it was also fired by design, and laid waste, but her nephew held an insurance policy of a thousand dollars, which at the proper time was paid to the trustees, and now "Pisgah church" adorns the original site; dedicated a few months since, free from debt! How refreshing to contemplate such a character! She was mighty in the Scriptures; there was scarcely an evangelical passage of Scripture that she could not quote as readily as repeat the alphabet. The religion of the cross touched every attribute of her being, which was indeed "a living sacrifice to God;" all the peculiarities of Methodism were embraced and adhered to through a long course of nearly half a century. Seldom, indeed, has any community been favored with such an example of devotedness, or one more influential for good, so long continued, in so large and respectable a circle, as is presented in the life of this noble Christian woman.

The religious interest is still maintained in several of the city Churches. Some ten or twelve were received into Church fellowship at "Foundry," on Sunday, and service continued during the week. The additions to "Union," or Twentieth street Church, have been considerable and important. At "East Washington," forty or more have professed conversion. Religious and temperance meetings are still held in open air. The "Christian Asociation's" prayer meeting is largely attended at six o'clock every evening, and good is accomplished.

Ex-Mayor Addison, of Georgetown, has been ill, and is not expected to recover. His case furnishes another illustration of the fact that, however indifferent men are to religion in life, they do not wish to die without it. He has professed a change of heart and received the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. He has been Mayor of Georgetown for thirty years, with only a few intervals; a man of superior talents, which, had they been sanctified to God, what a power for good in Church would they have exerted? Few men, even in the Methodist Church, are better read in her doctrines than Mr. Addison. Ought there not to be made more direct personal effort for the conversion of public men? Are they not, as a class, neglected by the Church?

The present confusion in Spain will probably give Cuba to the United States by purchase. This is discussed in Cabinet.

The weather is very October like.

Your readers are much pleased with the enlargement of the ADVOCATE.

From Mississippi.

MERIDIAN, September 28, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:—We are all feeling quite anxious, at this moment, about the condition of affairs in your city, a rumor has reached here that a terrible riot is hourly expected and that the stores are closed. May God shield the loyal people from the terrific thunder cloud of rebel vengeance. I know that you and the gallant band of Methodist itinerants and our churches, will be the special objects of its visitation, yet have faith to believe that while it may scathe, it can not blast, and our glorious banner on which is inscribed the name of Jesus and Peace on earth and good will towards men, will lift its head in the glorious sunlight of triumph which is soon to succeed this dark and awful hour.

We are striving in this State to convince our oppressors by reason, persuasion and practical demonstration, that the mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church is the extension of the kingdom of Christ, the elevation of fallen humanity; but they are slow to relax, the votaries of Democracy unwillingly tolerate a denomination that does not by active sympathy array itself against the legislation of Congress and oppose the election of General Grant to the Presidency.

I think that religious and political freedom at the South is entirely conditioned on the election of General Grant.

To-night our love feast will take place at Meridian; a good time is expected. This will close our Quarterly Meeting. Yesterday I administered sacrament at Marion, six miles from Meridian, at the morning service, and immediately after left for Meridian, administering the sacred ordinance at the afternoon service. I find Marion circuit in a good condition. The preacher in charge, Brother J. Aaron Moore. He holds a local relation o ourt Church, he was a delegate to the late Constitutional Convention and exhibited much ability. This circuit has three appointments, Marion, Lauderdale and Loomasuba. Brother Moore's report at the Quarterly Conference showed increase in membership during the year, there being 376 probationers and 46 members. At Marion they have paid for a large lot for which they hold a clear title, and have erected a temporary building; at Lauderdale Springs they expect next week to secure a lot. The results of the Quarterly Meeting at Meridian are gratifying: yet I find "things at loose ends" here. The Church suffered embarrassment from the failure of the preacher appointed by the Bishop to accept his appointment. A local exhorter was licensed to preach and put in charge, and in spite of his faithfulness has encountered difficulties which have hindred a larger success. Last night there were thirty-nine penitent souls crying for forgiveness: twenty-four of them were young men.

Meridian is the focal point of three railroads, and shrewd business men say it is more progressive than any town in the State, and will be what Indianapolis is to Indiana. There is no doubt that under judicious management it will be the strongest point in the Mississippi Conference.

The Louisiana Annual Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church meets to-day at Vicksburg.

A day or two since I received a letter from a member of our Church at Durant, in which the following information is given: "Our pastor, Brother Scarborough, preached night after night until he was taken down with the lung fever."

Rev. Alfred Handy, of Canton, writes, September 24: "I am on the eve of winding up my protracted meeting at Canton; many have been happily converted; many are yet seeking the Savior. I visited Breck's Chapel last Sabbath and received ten members: all we need now is preachers, and we will take Madison County. They come in from the plantations for twenty-five miles around, uging me to organize the 'Mother Church.' In the interior of the county the people are starving for the Gospel."

It is but due to Brother Handy and Brother Levy to say that they are at all times ready to make sacrifice and go into the country to gather in the scattered sheep of Israel, and they are blessed with signal success.

There is much sickness among the people everywhere I have traveled recently. The cotton crop this year is a failure again. There is an abundance of corn and sweet potatoes. It is greatly feared that the present scarcity of money will continue for some time to come.

THE HOWARD ORPHAN ASYLUM, AT LAUDERDALE.

This institution should receive the attention of the Mississippi Methodist Episcopal Annual Conference, in view of the important relation it holds to the half million of colored people of this State. An organization of our Church being recently commenced here I left Meridian on last Saturday, at 5 P. M., and arrived at Lauderdale about 6½. The night was dark and the rain pouring down incessantly: after wading through water for near half a mile, in company with Brother Moore, who has charge of the circuit, hospitable quarters were found at the house of Mr. Smith.

Sunday morning I started for the Howard Orphan Asylum, which is three quarters of a mile from the village.

Its Location.—The site is a most convenient, healthy and beautiful one. It is on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, which connects Mobile with Cairo, and is equi-distant from the Northern and Southern extremities of the State. Being adjacent to the Lauderdale Mineral Springs, a favorite resort for health by the Southern whites, before the war, the healthfulness of the location is evident. It embraces one hundred and twenty acres of cleared land, abounding with beautiful shade trees and an abundance of good water. It is highly elevated and diversified by hill and vale, and of a fertility unsurpassed by any in the State.

The Buildings—Are United States Hospital buildings, in good order, of the following number and dimensions: 3, 30x150; 1, 30x450; 6, 36x36, and would accommodate five hundred soldiers.

Its Origin.—The Howard Orphan Asylum was established by the Indiana yearly meeting of Friends, March 1, 1866. They purchased the land at a cost of $2,100, and the use of the above described buildings granted them by the government. This society managed and partly sustained it by furnishing clothing and teachers up to April 15th, 1868.

Its Present Control.—It is now under the supervision of the Freedmen's Bureau, and is superintended by Mr. O. C. French, Agent of the Freedmen's Bureau, who appears to be zealous and faithful in the discharge of his duty.

Condition, &c.—There are one hundred orphan children now being cared for. They are favored with good educational advantages, and are enjoying the care and tutelage generally which might be expected from a supervision which has only a promise of being temporary. From what I could learn, with the exception of periods when epidemic reigned, the mortality has been small.

The Future Prospect.—There can be no doubt that the Freedmen's Bureau will be discontinued in this State within the next two years, and unless some provision is made for the support of the Howard Orphan Asylum it must be discontinued also. For less than two thousand dollars, it is highly probable that this valuable tract of land and buildings could be secured to a society working under the patronage of our church. Here the Orphan Asylum, the Home for Aged and Infirm, the College, Academy and Theological Seminary, all could have room and a fountain of learning and charity would be opened under the direction of the all-conquering power of Methodism, that would indeed bless the colored people of this State, as they have never been blessed before.

At DeKalb, Kemper county, the colored Methodist congregation are about to unite with us. They have contracted for the purchase of a building formerly used by the Universalists. An appointment was made to meet them on Saturday and Sunday last, but the heavy rain lasting during the two days rendered it almost impossible to be present, as thirteen miles of the journey had to be traveled on horseback.

Lauderdale Quarterly Meeting was held at this important little town on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, by the Presiding Elder, instead of at DeKalb. The heavy rain did not prevent a good congregation from assembling. All of the officers of the Army and Bureau at the post attended the services. Everything wore an encouraging aspect and proved that Brother Moore, preacher in charge, is an efficient and faithful workman. Five united with us. It is expected that the new church will be completed before our next Quarterly Meeting is held.

Rankin County.—This a bitter section. Opposition to us is fierce. Three fifths of the colored people voted the Democratic ticket at the last election on account of the extrinsic pressure brought to bear on them: but our organization still lives and grows. Brother Miles Preacher, the preacher in charge, makes good reports and is doing a good work.

Enterprise.—I left Lauderdale, two o'clock, Monday morning, for Enterprise, to spend a day there, having heard that Brother Jones was fighting a great battle and the slain of the Lord were many. There is prospect of a great revival. The school is in excellent condition. Miss E. G. Highgate, the teacher, has awakened a degree of interest among the people truly astonishing.

Colored Men Attention.

The following address to the colored voters of the South was received by us a few days since, for publication in the ADVOCATE. It comes from the colored Methodist Episcopal Church of San Francisco, California. Knowing from the source of it that our colored citizens will be greatly interested therein, and that the principles advocated are just and right, we gladly publish it:

SAN FRANCISCO, California, September 8, 1868.

Brethren of the South:

Let our faith in a common Christianity, our belief that its cause in the world, and especially in this nation, is to be materially influenced by the course you shall pursue, that our own future, and the future of all, who have during the long dark years of our bondage, been our friends, and the friends of equal justice to all everywhere, will be either darkened by fears and doubts or brightened with hope and confidence, as you shall elect, be our apology for addressing you on the political questions which are now agitating the people of this nation. Thanks to an overruling and all-wise Providence, working through the loyal heart, and by the patriotic arm of the free North, we are permitted to enjoy the happy and proud privilege of addressing you as freemen having the power to serve yourselves, your country, and better than all by so doing to serve your God and elevate our race.

Brothers, you must be true. All the suffering and wrong you have endured in the past is pushing you forward, while Christianity and civilization are beckoning with the finger of promise and inviting you to follow. If you prove true, as we pray with heartfelt confidence that you will, then will your freedom and enfranchisement be a tower of strength to you and your friends in the future, as your bondage has to you and their enemies in the past. We know, brothers, that your hearts are right. Should you err it will be an error of judgment. We do not presume to instruct you, but by giving you briefly the facts within our own knowledge you will be better prepared by comparing them with those of your own, to judge of your duty as Christian voters.

The same God watches over your actions in the South that keeps his all-seeing eye on us in California; the same great rule of his law binds all. Hence, if we reason correctly as to what would be our duty here, will be your duty there: and we know that we write the words of truth when we record, that all the friends of justice, all the elements of progress and Christian advancement, all who would protect you and us in our rights, are absorbed by the National Union Republican party.

All whose minds are liberal enough and hearts broad enough to wish, pray, and vote for justice and equality to all men, of every race and condition, all who have plead the cause of the oppressed, all who would protect you from the lawless bands of secret assassins who are determined to reduce you to a condition of servitude again, are with that party, and will vote for Grant and Colfax. While in the Democratic party are to be found all who preach that God did not make of one blood all nations of men to dwell on the face of the earth; all who believe that the Golden Rule is limited in its application to white men; all who believe the Declaration of Independence to be a self-evident lie; all who believe that bondage is the normal condition of the negro; all who would deny us the right to testify in the courts; all who apologize for and sympathize with those who persecute us without regard to time, cause or place; all who by debauchery and crime have obliterated moral conviction and become a burlesque on the name of man; all will vote the Democratic ticket and vote for Seymour and Blair. Let us assure you that they will make a sum total powerful for evil. Need you wonder that a contemplation of the possibility of their accession to power causes us anxiety. The Democratic party at the South must and will be the ally of the Democratic party at the North. The Republican party at the South must and will be the ally of the Republican party at the North. Choose ye whom you will serve—God or Mammon; and remember that as you choose so will you be judged by those who have placed the ballot in your hands. Should you cast your lot with the party of freedom and progress, then will you furnish our friends in the North an additional reason for enfranchising those of our race within the States where that right is still denied them.

Go back with us in a retrospective glance for the short period of forty years, and view the situation, tracing the means by which so great a change has been produced. Then the demon of slavery held all classes of men, of every grade and condition, captive to his mandates: the whole nation bowed, the Church, the State, the lawyer and the priest wore his livery. No where in all this land could a voice be raised to plead the cause of the slave, except at the risk of life and certain social ostracism. Even Bishops were to be found who preached that the Golden Rule protected a man in the possession of his slave. Think not that this was the exception. At that time the entire Church, ministry and laymen, as a rule, either advocated such a doctrine or remained silent. Those who had the courage to oppose the monster in the zenith of his power, constituted a very small exception. These few men, not because they loved our race and the slave especially, but because they loved justice, hated evil and feared God, though few and weak in numbers, yet armed with the sword of truth, and strong in their own honest convictions, went forth to battle for the right. Everywhere their voices and acts were heard, seen and felt, as they denounced and voted against the "sum of all villainy." For so doing they were frequently subjected to every description of indignity—pelted with eggs, striped with the lash, tarred and feathered, rode on rails, and some irrigated the tree of liberty with their life's blood. But in spite of all they pressed forward. When they went to the politician they were told to go the Church—"Slavery is a moral evil," and they did go there, thundering the denunciation of an angry God against a Church which would sanction the dealing in "Slaves and souls of men." The Church said—go into politics. "Slavery is a political evil;" and they did go there, organizing to resist the power of the tyrant king. Church and State, parties and institutions, rocked and swayed as they were struck by the whirlwind of truth, directed by those pioneer heroes. They fed and sheltered the panting slave, as he was fleeing from bondage when the bloodhounds were baying on his track; they assisted him to escape from the officers of a damnable law, though that law for doing unto the slave as they would wish him to do unto them, doomed them to imprisonment and fine. The cause thus started has assumed different phases at different periods. But whether led by Gerret Smith in 1838, or James G. Birney in 1840–44, Martin Van Buren in 1848, John P. Hale in 1852, by John C. Fremont in 1856, or the immortal and martyred Lincoln in 1860–64, or as now, in 1868, by the hero General Grant, it means the same in spirit and tendency; whether called the Liberty party, as in 1840–44, or the Free Soil Party, as in 1848–52, or Republican party, as in 1856–60–64 and now, in 1868. Our friends have been the life and soul of the movement; their object is to place all on an equality before the laws. Their course in the past, is a guarantee of what they will do in the future, if successful. We would not convey the impression that all the efforts they have put forth, all the sacrifices they have made, have been for our race—not so—it was for an idea and a principle. We were but incidents.

In serving their principles they served us. Had any other race occupied our position, they would have pursued the same course. In being true to themselves they must be true to us and all men, because they believe in the universal brotherhood of man. Should you ask why they have not given us the ballot, we answer, that while a majority of the Republican party are anxious and willing to grant us equal and exact justice, a minority of them who are yet bound by the chains of prejudice, have, when the issue has been made, voted with the Democrats, thereby defeating the measure. Again many who wish and intend to work and vote to place all on an equality before the laws, do not think it wise to raise the issue in the doubtful States at this time, because if by so doing the Democracy should secure the control of the Government, before your rights are fully secured, then all would be lost. When we contemplate all that has been accomplished, we can but feel confidence in the future. We know the spirit which is the motive power of the Republican party, and we know that the spirit comes from God; we know that should that party fail to work out the problem and establish justice, then that spirit will organize another party to do the work. We know that the men who have always voted with the view to slavery's destruction, who, when the nation's sword was unsheathed, continued to pray and preach that it should cut the galling bonds from the limbs of the oppressed, and ceased not in their efforts until the deed was done, can never remain idle until the final consummation of their work.

We disdain to address you as a class, appealing to your passions and prejudices. Too long have we been the victims of such a course from our enemies. But we do appeal to you as men and Christians to prove true in this crisis, that you may be free indeed. The power to select men to rule over you who will rule in the fear of the Lord, has a peculiar signification. If you do this, if the Christian heart of the South and the Christian heart of the North fulfills its mission, then will peace, happiness, prosperity and freedom be the portion of this whole people; and never again will the demon of domestic war raise his terrible throne in our midst. In conclusion, permit us to ask your prayerful consideration of the whole subject. Ponder it well; strike with your votes for GOD, GRANT and LIBERTY.

That our Heavenly Father may ever have you in his keeping, and that your course may ever be such as shall best promote the cause of righteousness on earth, will ever be our fervent prayer.

BARNEY FLETCHER.
JOHN SAMPSON.

Notice.

"Prayer meeting and lecture as usual on Wednesday evening, in the lecture room. Dear brethren, I urge you all to attend these weekly meetings."

Some of the "dear brethren" deported themselves in this way:

Brother A. thought it looked like rain, and concluded that his family, including himself, of course, had better remain at home. On Thursday evening it was raining very hard, and the same brother A. hired a carriage and took his whole family to the Academy of Music, to hear a lecture on the "Intelligence of the Lobster."

Brother B. thought he was too tired to go, so he stayed at home and worked at the sled he had promised to make for Billy.

Sister C. thought the pavements were too slippery. It would be very dangerous for her to venture out. I saw her next morning going down street to get her old bonnet "done up." She had an old pair of stockings drawn over her shoes.

Sister D. thought there wouldn't be more than a dozen people at prayer meeting. She doesn't like these little meetings, so she didn't go. If she had gone there would have been thirteen. I met her next evening at a social gathering where there were just ten folks. She said she had spent a "delightful" evening.

Three-fourths of the members stayed at home. God was at the prayer meeting. The pastor was there. One-fourth of the members were there, and God blessed them. The persons who stayed at home were each represented by a vacant seat. God don't bless empty pews.

YOUNG MEN.—Look here—you are ambitious, are you? You want to get up in the world, do you? Well, don't try it by wondering how other people not half so active as yourself have done it—but watch your chances, keep your eyes open, and when you find a chap sleeping on the road to fame, hustle him off into the ditch and go ahead—never wait, but like perpetual motion, keep moving.

To the Honorable President and Members of the Senate:

I return to the Senate an act entitled an act transferring certain funds in the State treasury to the general fund, without my signature, for the following reasons:

1. The money which is by this act proposed to be transferred was collected by a special tax on real and personal property, for the purpose of meeting one hundred thousand dollars of the indebtedness evidenced by certain bonds issued to provide means to rebuild the levees of the State. The act imposing this tax is in the nature of a contract between the State and the purchasers of the bonds, which should not be impaired by diverting the funds collected from paying the interest and principal, as stipulated in the act.

2. The act would only give temporary relief to the treasury, and would be prejudicial to a future negotiation of levee bonds or loans to meet the current expenses of the State.

Other and better means are at the immediate disposal of the Legislature, by which all the money necessary to administer the Government and pay the expenses of the Legislatnre may be raised.

(Signed) H. C. WARMOTH,

Mr. Foute then moved to amend section second by inserting after the word "court" in line seventeen, the words "except in the parish of Jefferson, in which parish the parish court shall be held in the courthouse in a separate room from the district court."

Adopted.

Section two was then adopted as amended.

Section third was then taken up and read.

Mr. Ray moved to amend section third by striking out the word "himself" in the fourth line, and insert the word "them selves" instead, and to strike out in the same line the word "his" and insert instead the word "their;" to strike out the word "deputy" in the sixth line, and insert the word "deputies" instead; to substitute the word "once" for the word "one" in the twenty-third line, and to insert after the word "court" in the thirty-third line, the words "by the order thereof."

Section three was then adopted as amended.

Section four being taken up, Mr. F. L. Jewell moved to strike out all from the commencement of the second line to the fifty-third line.

On motion of Mr. Ray, Mr. Jewell's motion was laid on the table.

Mr. Bacon moved the following amendment to section four: to strike out in the fourth line the words "Clerk also," and insert instead the words "ex officio" clerks.

Adopted.

Mr. Ray offered the following amendment: to strike out "and parish" in the eleventh line; to insert after "dockets" in the fourteenth line the words "for the Parish Courts;" to strike out the word "the" in the fifteenth lind; to strike out the word "such" in the eighteenth line, and insert the word "each," and strike out the period before the word "the" in the twenty-second line; to strike out in line sixty-five the word "imprison," and insert "order him to be imprisoned."

Adopted.

The section was then adopted as amended.

Mr. Todd gave notice that he would on Tuesday move a reconsideration of the vote on the adoption of the section.

Mr. Todd moved to adjourn.

Lost.

Mr. Poindexter asked for a call of the House.

The call was ordered, the following Senators answering to their names:

Blackman, Bacon, Campbell, Coupland, Darrall, Egan, Futch, Francois, F. L. Jewell, Kelso, Lynch, Monette, Packard, Poindexter, Pollard, Ray, Todd, White—18.

No quorum.

Mr. Blackman asked that the Sergeant be requested to bring in absent members.

The Chair announced the following committees:

Committee to inquire into disbursements and expenditures of the Board of Levee Commissioners—Messrs. Todd, Ray, and Braughn.

A quorum being present.

The fifth section of the bill to organize Parish Courts was taken up and adopted.

Mr. Bacon moved to adjourn.

The President called the attention of the Senate to the Governor's message, which awaited action.

Mr. Bacon's motion to adjourn was lost.

Mr. Wilcox called up the Governor's message.

The message was taken up and read, as follows:

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
State of Louisiana,
July 27, 1868.

To the Honorable President and Members of the Senate:

I return to the Senate the joint resolution requesting the General commanding the armies of the United States to furnish the civil authorities of this State such forces as may be necessary to secure peace and good order in the State, without his signature, for the reason to wit: That it is not in accordnace with the law in such case made and provided, which requires that the President of the United States, and not the General of the armies, should be applied to to furnish the forces required, as appears by Brightly's Digest, page 440, under the title of "Insurrection."

H. C. WARMOTH,
Governor of Louisiana.

Mr. Lynch moved a reconsideration of the joint resolution vetoed by the Governor.

Adopted.

The question was then put whether the Governor's veto be sustained or not.

The veto was sustained.

On motion the Senate adjourned.

C. H. MERRITT,
Secretary of the Senate.

NOTICES.

Mr. Campbell gave notice that on Wednesday he would introduce a bill to incorporate the Northern Louisiana and Texas Railroad Company.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. Braughn, according to previous notice, introduced an act to amend article 354 of the Civil Code of Practice.

Mr. Braughn asked for a suspension of the rules to put the bill upon its second reading.

The rules were suspended and the bill read.

On motion of Mr. Braughn, the bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Lynch asked for a suspension of the rules to introduce the following joint resolution:

WHEREAS, A message from the Governor inclosing a memorial from citizens of the parishes of Franklin, Tensas, Rapides, Caldwell, and Ouachita, sets forth the fact that the most horrible murders and outrages upon the lives and rights of loyal men are being perpetrated in Franklin parish and adjoining parishes, and that there are secret organizations in said parishes to destroy Union men, as is fully set forth in the said memorial; and

Whereas, There exists as yet no sufficient force in the State to protect the citizens thereof; therefore

SECTION 1. Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That in accordance with article four, of the Constitution of the United States, the President of the United States is hereby requested to furnish the civil authorities of this State, such forces as may be necessary to secure peace and good order in the State, and to send such forces to such points as the Governor may deem necessary to protect the peaceable citizens against domestic violence, and to aid the civil authorities in the execution of the laws.

Mr. Ray moved a suspension of the rules to put the bill on its third reading.

Mr. Jewell, of Orleans, rose to a point of order that, when a bill is vetoed by the Governor, it is not competent to introduce the same bill at the same session of the Legislature.

Mr. Jewell asked for a decision on his point of order.

The President: The chair understands that the Governor vetoed the bill on account of its informality in not applying to the proper authority for aid, and that this joint resolution is offered to meet his views. If the opinion which the Senator advanced was correct, the Governor could at all times overule the action of the Legislature by a veto. The chair, therefore, decides the point of order not well taken.

The rules were then suspended, the bill read a third time and adopted.

On motion of Mr. Lynch the bill was sent to the House for concurrence.

Mr. Bacon asked for a suspension of the rules to offer the following resolution:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That the President of the United States be and he is hereby requested to cause to be restored to the State of Louisiana the statue of Washington, carried away from the State of Louisiana during the late war.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That the Governor of the State be and he is hereby requested to forward a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States.

The Chief Clerk of the House appeared with a message from the House asking the concurrence of the Senate in House bill No. 29, a joint act to regulate the publication of legal notices, etc.

The bill was read and lies over under the rules.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

Mr. Ray called up Senate bill No. 10, an act to organize the Parish Courts of the State, and fixing the duties of Sheriffs and Clerks, providing penalties for their failure to discharge their duties, fixing seal for the Clerk of the District Court, and providing a salary for the Parish Judges, and giving the Parish Courts jurisdiction of suits for separation of bed and board, and divorce and interdiction suits, was called up.

Mr. Blackman made a point of order that the bill was not properly unfinished business, which position was also strongly maintained in a lengthy argument by Mr. A. B. Bacon, of Orleans.

The President decided that the point of order was not well taken.

The bill was then taken up as unfinished business.

Section six was read.

Mr. Ray moved to add, at the end of line eight, the words "and that Parish Judges may act in the emancipation of minors."

On motion of Mr. Ray, the amendment was adopted.

The section was then adopted as a whole.

Section seven was read and adopted.

A message from the Governor was received.

Section eight was read and adopted, with an amendment of Mr. Ray, changing the words "parishes" in line three to "districts."

Section nine was read.

Mr. Ray moved, in line eight, instead of "$1500" to insert "$2000," and in line eleven to insert "$2500" in place of "$2000."

Mr. Jewell, of Pointe Conpee, moved to amend line eleven by inserting in place of "$2000" "$3000."

Mr. Wilcox offered as a substitute for all the amendments the following:

To strike out all after the word "treasurer" in the fifth line (section nine) and insert the words "of $3000."

Mr. Ray moved to lay the substitute of Mr. Wilcox on the table.

The subsiitute was laid on the table on a division by 17 yeas, 10 nays.

Mr. Ray moved to lay the amendment offered by Senator Jewell, of Pointe Coupee, on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered, resulting:

Nays: Campbell, Coupland, Futch, Francois, Jewell of Feliciana, Jenks, O'Hara, Monette, Ogden, Poindexter, Pollard, Todd, Thompson, Wilcox, Williams—15.

The President voting in the affirmative, the amendment of Senator Jewell, of Pointe Coupee, was laid on the table.

The President stated as his reason for voting yea that he was desirous of saving all the money possible to the State.

The amendment of Mr. Ray was then adopted (making the salary $2500).

Mr. Ray moved the adoption of the section as a whole.

Mr. O'Hara moved to strike out all after the word "treasurer" and insert "$1500 with the same fees now allowed Clerks of Courts."

Mr. Ray moved to lay the amendment of Mr. O'Hara on the table.

Adopted.

On motion of Mr. Ray the section as a whole was adopted.

Section ten was read.

Mr. Todd offered a substitute for section ten, providing that, except in the parish of Jefferson, the salary of Parish Judge should be $2500; in that parish $1500, with such fees as Clerks of District Courts are entitled to, and that the Clerk of said Court shall be appointed by the Judge.

The substitude of Mr. Todd was lost on a division by yeas 4, nays 15.

Mr. Jewell, of Pointe Coupee, offered a substitute for section ten, providing that the Clerks of the District Courts should receive no fees as Clerks of the Parish Courts.

Mr. Ray moved to lay the substitute on the table, but withdrew his motion at the request of Mr. Campbell to permit Mr. Jewell to state his reasons for offering it.

Mr. Ray renewed his motion to lay the the substitute of Mr. Jewell, of Pointe Coupee, on the table.

Mr. Jewell called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, resulting:

Yeas: Messrs. Anderson, Blackman, Braughn, Bacon, Darrall, Egan, Futch, Foute, E. L. Jewell, Jenks, Kelso, Lewis, Lynch, Offutt, Packard, Ray, Thompson, Wilcox, Whitney, White and Williams—21.

Nays: Campbell, Francois, F. L. Jewell, Monette, Poindexter, Pollard, Smith and Todd—8.

The substitute was, therefore, laid on the table.

Sections ten and eleven were then adopted.

Mr. Ray moved that the question be put whether this bill be engrossed, and read a third time.

Adopted.

Mr. Todd moved that the bill be printed as amended.

The President decided the motion out of order, not having been made before the motion to engross was passed.

The bill lies over under the rules for its third reading.

The rules were suspended and the report received.

On motion of Mr. Ray, Senate bill No. 12 was then ordered to be engrossed, and made the special order of the day on Wednesday.

The Senate then went into executive session.

The executive session having been raised on motion, the Senate adjourned.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS!

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

GENERAL GRANT ELECTED.

"Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory," through the Republicans! All hail! Pennsylvania and Ohio and Indiana and Nebraska! These brave States are now on the roll of honor, with Maine, Vermont and Connecticut. The election of Grant and Colfax is now assured beyond a Democratic doubt, or a Republican fear. The Union men of Louisiana are jubilant. A mountain of anxiety has been removed. A tormenting incubus has been lifted. On Wednesday we saw more happy loyal faces than we have seen in a twelve-month. God only knows what loyalists have had to suffer in the South, and He knows what joys such election returns afford. "The morning cometh." "At evening time it shall be light." The Democrats curse, but the Republicans bless. All hail!

How do the Democrats like it? Why, they don't like it. They yield the contest, and they will soon assert that Grant is the mightiest General in the world. Some of the baser sort talk about massacreing the loyal whites in cold revenge, and they may do it, but God have mercy on the murderers when Grant becomes President. But fears sink and joys rise. Again we say, all hail!

Captain Sheridan's Speech before the Empire Club.

We would have gone twenty miles to listen to this speech.

Beautiful in metaphor of imagery, invincible in argument and inimitable in humor, it was a treat, the like of which is seldom heard, and carried his auditory by storm.

Captain Sheridan, to have a fair field for his really wonderful powers of oratory, should have an auditory of at least five thousand. He was in his element a few months since, when in the beautiful capital of Ohio, where such men as Schenck, Logan, Colfax and Chase, have schooled the people to the appreciation of a high standard of oratory, and in the hearts of citizens where still live the charmed memories of the eloquence of Corwin, Vinton and Ewing. He held thousands upon thousands in wrapt attention, and produced an impression equalled by that of no young speaker since the days of the Wagon Boy. Let his life be spared and we predict that two years hence he will be the most popular speaker among all parties in Louisiana.

A Seceding Pauper.

A man published in Wednesday's Times a card to the effect that he had seceded from the Ames Methodist Episcopal Church. The only parallel to this is that out West the paupers in a county poor-house held a meeting and resolved to secede from the State.

This man borrowed from the pastor and leading members of the church about three hundred dollars, and when he could borrow no more, he concluded that he could not agree, "religiously and politically" with the pastor, and therefore seceded.

Confessing Christ.

It is a common remark that religion has become the fashion; that a profession of Christianity and Church membership are no longer disreputable nor any hindrance to worldly advancement. It is not dishonoring to true religion to admit that measurably this is the case, consequent upon the triumph of the cross over idolatry and infidelity; while it is no less true that fashionable religion is after all only a fashion; it has no substance or reality; a Jonah's gourd, and therefore of little or no value to mankind. An article of commerce may be so diluted or adulterated as to possess nothing belonging to the genuine excepting the name, and perhaps a power for harm. However, God will never leave himself without witnesses. Their existence and confession of faith, their boldness and holy living are his means of blessing the world. The very presence of such a one is a bold and standing protest against sin and a defiance to the Prince of this world. Men may abuse the Puritan, they may pity the Quietist and ridicule the earnest spiritually minded Christian; style such bigots and fanatics; they may rage against revivals and camp meetings, but the truth will remain that no puritanism means no Christianity. It is the seed life of all your rank, luxuriant growth of beautiful Churches, and wide spread ecclesiastical enterprises; yes, even of your social, industrial and intellectual prosperity and safety. Touch these pillars of God's temple and the desolation wrought by old Sampson at his death would be remembered as a whisper to a thunder crash. Christian civilization is the outgrowth of personal piety, in a few despised but earnest confessors of Christ, as a mighty forest may be produced from a few small saplings.

The continuance and prosperity of the Church depends then upon this sort of material, alas, too often exceptional with us; for it is calls for a life of cross-bearing, an open war with sin, which only the few care to wage. Opposition is even met with in the Church itself. The cry of those who are at ease in God's vineyard is always, "This is the heir, come let us kill him, that the inheritance may be ours." Yet when the danger is seen and the remedy made known, many will heed the warning and stand up for Jesus as never before. The great want of the Church is the same in all ages and places—it is witnesses for Christ—men and women who are not ashamed of the cross anywhere, who can talk about Jesus in all proper places and are willing to be singular, so that the cause they love does not suffer, and sinners are not left to travel undisturbed the way to endless ruin. Men who would plunge into the rushing stream to drag a fellow creature from a watery grave, often shrink from uttering a word to a friend, a neighbor, or even a dear relative, which might gain him heaven. It is not a formal admission, even upon conviction, of the truth of Christianity, that we need; not even conversion and religious profession alone, but the Christ-life, going about doing good, and thus experiencing more delight in the possession of God's love in the heart, than all the earthly pleasures which the worldly and formal can possibly obtain by their toils, their vigils and their wealth. We profess to believe that the declarations of Paul and his co-workers, in the early times, were not hyperboles and metaphors; that his joy inexpressible and full of glory is the common privilege of God's people. The world holds us to this point, and we boldly declare to all, Christianity is no failure, considered as a means of happiness, but the fault is in us. The bold, straightforward Christian is always a happy man: the envied of all; he is a leader confessed everywhere, however humble his circumstances or obscure his position; and the Christly annointing possessed by him, poured by the Divine Master into such earthen vessels, accomplishes the real work of the Christian Church. Popular Christianity is an amalgam of indifferentism, ritualism and extreme toleration. The "bread Church" theory is accepted, with a platform spacious enough to accommodate the Pagan, the Mahomedan and skeptic of all degrees; a sort of Masonic religion with the blasphemous creed of Pope:

"Father of all, in every age,
In every clime adored,
By saint, by savage and by sage,
Jehovah, Jove or Lord."

It is, be good to the neighbor, get rich, be respectable. The religious instinct is conceded, its necessity and advantage admitted and the good natured public decides to humor our notions so far as they will not disturb their soul-slumbers.

The crisp, pure testimony of a holy man or woman will startle and alarm the "strong man who keepeth his goods in peace;" he fears the "stronger than he." Satan clings as with a death grip to his prey and will not willingly "come out of the man." It is for you, my Christian friend, to speak the word in Jesus' name, which alone can break the spell and exorcise the demon. The responsibility is upon you; the present and eternal happiness of a fellow being is in peril; humanity as well as piety should impel you to be faithful; nay, your own happiness is endangered by neglect of this duty. All around you are those who are almost persuaded to be Christians, and these persons usually desire a higher Christian life than that they observe in the generality of religious professors.

Let it be your happiness to exemplify as well as testify of the doctrines of God and our Savior Jesus Christ; for the honor of our holy Christianity, give it to the world, that personal religion is the joy, the glory, the jewelry of life; that it is the salt which saves society, conserving all that is of value among men. We have the right to expect, in return for the benefits that true religion confers upon the world, more than a bare permission to live and to enjoy our opinions; yet its favors are doled out to us, like charity to a pauper. It is full time that God's people stood forth in their grandeur, as the saviors of the world and in conscious integrity, with humble boldness, declare the conditions upon which God's favor and assured happiness may alone be obtained. Let Christ be confessed in the pulpit, in the family, in the streets, in business and politics, by ministers and people, men and women. If you would see the church honored, and revivals of religion spreading all over the land, the sentiment of the poet must be engraved upon your forehead.

"Ashamed of Jesus! that dear Friend,
On whom my hopes of Heaven depend;
No! when I blush, be this my shame,
That I no more revere His name."

Women of the South.

We presume that it will be received as an honor and a compliment to the ladies of the South, to state that they are taking an active part in the Presidential canvass, and are most enthusiastic for Blair and Seymour. To inspire the hearts of fathers, brothers, husbands and sons, they almost nightly present flags to some Democratic club, and entertain such in the most sumptuous manner. It was only last week that they presented to the "Rosseau Guards" a banner of rare magnificence, and provided two hundred gallons of punch, which General Rousseau and the "Guards" drank up. Nor are they contented with banners and punch, but they condescend to ride in night processions: to plait, with their own "lily white hands," gorgeous wreaths of natural and artificial flowers to adorn the flagstaff of some Seymour club: to breathe out their souls in patriotic songs; to deliver addresses when banners are presented, illuminate their houses when the Democracy pass in torch-light procession, and wave plaudits to cheer them in the canvass. If Louisiana goes for Blair and Seymour, the Democratic ladies of the State should have the credit.

The ill fortunes of war have not changed the political sentiments and feelings of the ladies of the South. They were the soul and animation of the strife, and were the last to yield in hope, when all was lost; and to-day, they are at once the vanguard and forlorn hope of Southern Democracy. Had it not been for their smiles and tears; for their entreaties and protestations; for their will and heart, the Democracy of the South would have been a thing of the past. Such foes are hard to conquer; such influences have potency that borders on omnipotence. Woman will say "scissors" to the last. Not until she wills it, will the reconstruction of the South be complete. This is a stubborn fact, and a problem for our learned publicists to consider and solve.

It may not be uninteresting to glance at some of the causes, which, operating have produced these results; and of the number, three may be mentioned. The women of the South have been most intimately identified with the system of domestic slavery, which has always been essentially political, and its political influence is the animation of the Presidential canvass on the Democratic side. Taught from childhood that the institution was of Divine origin; receiving on the happy day of her nuptials a hundred slaves as her marriage dower, which she proudly presented to her liege lord; impressed that the bulk of her family possessions consisted in slaves: believing that the great sugar, cotton and rice plantations of her sunny South could not be cultivated by other than slave labor; and then all her life time accustomed to command, by her "beck or call," the servants of the household, who relieved her of all labor, and made her a little princess, it is no marvel that she should be the avowed enemy of those whose swords had demolished her princedom and set free her bondmen and bondwomen. Paley has justly said, that in the "family are the rudiments of an empire," and the Southern family was essentially political—it was a little State, and the Confederacy was a domestic alliance; a combination of families, like so many clans, allied against a common foe.

Relieved from all labor, the ladies of the South had much more time for political studies than the men; and it is not too much to say, that in political colloquial discussion, they are the most brilliant women in the world. The unwritten history of political life in Washington, would reveal a woman-power in our National legislation, which would be no less astonishing to those who have not thus viewed the subject, than convincing that our position is correct. Not so with the ladies of the North. While their culture is as perfect; their beauty, grace and refinement unexcelled, and their general knowledge superior, yet, in politics, both as to principles and discussion, they are excelled by their Southern sisters. The structure of Northern society is different from the structure of society in the South. The family in the North is patriotic, not political, and the politicians there are the men and not the women. There, woman's influence is moral and religious, hence, in the aggregate, more potent and salutary.

Nor should the power of religious education be ignored in this discussion. Baptized by priests who were themselves slaveholders, and who taught, as a part of each Sabbath's sermon, that God had ordained slavery as a benevolent instrumentality for the Christianization of an inferior race, how could it be otherwise than that the women of the South should be the more ardent politicians, seeing they have the more ardent natures, and are more ardent in their religious feelings. In all religious conflicts woman has been the last to retire from the field, whether the religion was true or false. The most brilliant examples of courage among the Jews and Carthaginians, the Greeks and Romans, and especially among the early Christians of all nations, were the female religionists.

The destruction of slavery is the removal of two of the principal causes of the results under consideration, and the country must wait patiently and hopefully for the removal of the third; namely, the present political, anti-republican pastors of the South. Their influence in the pulpit and in the family must be broken; a class of truer, wiser and more evangelical pastors must be invited to our Southern pulpits and pastorates, and then will the children of another and better generation be taught the Gospel more perfectly, and the women of the South will be less political, but more moral and religious in their influence.

Riots! Riots! Riots!

In last week's issue we referred to several recent breaches of the peace, involving the murder and maiming of many hundred of innocent men, women and children, and for the avowed purpose of stifling free speech, defeating the Republican party and ridding the South of Radicals. The Millican, Texas, riot resulted tragically to a valued minister of our church. He was taken out and hung in cold blood, for simply making out an official statement of the difficulties. The Camilla, Georgia, outrage is still excused or justified by the Democratic press. Military and Bureau inspectors go back and forth to inquire into the Opelousas massacre. Still no arrests are made, while our teacher, Mr. Bently, is either murdered or is hiding in the swamps, no information as to his condition having been received by his nearest relative. The Shreveport troubles have no explanation, and we find in the New Orleans Times, of the twelfth, the following very significant item: "The Lizzie Hopkins brought down from Shreveport 917 bales of cotton and fifty passengers. Some thirty-eight negroes, convicted and sentenced to the Penitentiary for one year for riot, were dropped at Baton Rouge." So there is civil law for negroes at least. "The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel." Our school teacher at Shreveport, has since our last, been set upon by a gang of armed ruffians, barely escaping with his life. One of our best ministers, for giving an account of riotous demonstrations in his town, near this city, had his meeting broken up on the following Sabbath, and was warned by the mob to refrain from the expression of his opinion upon their doings. We can not do a greater service to the cause of law and order, than to republish, from the New Orleans Times, its account of several cold-blooded murders in Jefferson, Texas, under the heading of Negro Riot.—We are pained to lay before our readers another evidence of the results of Radical incendiarism, which they in their fanaticism and partisan blindness call "Progress." G. W. Smith, a delegate to the Austin, Texas, Convention, had been in the habit of inflaming the negro population by speeches of the most incendiary character. His influence and conduct among the negroes of the Coy were dangerous in the extreme to the public peace. Hence, feeling their danger from civil outbreak on the part of the negroes under Smith's teachings, the citizens notified him on his departure to the Austin Convention, that his absence would be preferred to his presence in Jefferson. He, however, returned to Jefferson, and seemed more determined than ever to inflame the blacks against the whites, and did all he could to create a local war of races. At length he called a meeting, at which he and Judge Caldwell, of the Supreme Court of Texas, were to be the chief managers. The meeting was called for Saturday, October 3, 1868, Smith being the leading spirit.

That same evening, Saturday, October 3, Mr. Philip Crump, a prominent citizen of Jefferson, was riding along the public thoroughfares with some friends, when the party were fired upon from a negro groggery, two of those with Mr. Crump were wounded.

During the discussion as to the arrangements of the meeting, Smith insisted to Judge Caldwell that the negroes and whites should be compelled to sit together. Caldwell reasoned with him, and argued against the policy of this proceeding, but Smith was determined, and a quarrel ensued between them, which prevented the taking place of the meeting.

The building was surrounded, and the whole party captured and turned over to the civil authorities. Smith acknowledged that he had fired, and said that he was "d—d sorry he didn't kill Crump." They were imprisoned in the county jail, and a military guard was set over them. The citizens, learning the circumstances, became very much excited, and a party of them representing the citizens of Jefferson, called upon the military guard at the jail and stated to them that there was not the slightest ill-feeling between the citizens of Jefferson and the military, but that this outrage was so shocking, that they demanded forthwith the custody of the prisoners. The Major in command made objection to this, but notwithstanding, in the face of the excited popular feeling, and the force which presented itself, he could not prevent the citizens from taking possession of the jail, when the prisoners were shot in their cells.

Such are the facts as furnished to us. We publish them for the information of our readers, but hope further intelligence may put another face on the affair.

The Great Battle of the Giants.

It is over. The country breathes freer. Gold goes up—money is plentier—trade revives—our bonds appreciate. Even Louisiana State securities advance. Confidence increases. The price of gimblet knives and revolvers falls. The hidden gatherings of armed conspirators, who have been plotting massacre and revolution for the last six months, disperse. Merchants withdraw their subscriptions from the clubs (so called). Thugs, roughs, and assassins, leave politics and go back to their normal avocations. Perry Fuller revises the list of his appointees. Steedman eschews the circle of the mystic three. The seven find themselves leaders without an army. The Grand Commander of the K. W. C. disbands his staff and orderlies. All this because the election of Grant is secure.

The fiat has thundered from the Alleghanies to the Rocky Mountains, "Let us have Peace." And lo! the echoes have not ceased to reverberate ere with the gray of the morning has come the dawn of a beautiful, health-bestowing peace. Let us thank God; take courage; look every man right in the eye; do what is right, and go ahead.

Now up, men of Louisiana! Adjourn your Legislature; go to the people: prepare them for the election. Our foes have broken their ranks. The moment has come, when as Grant said at Donnelson: "Which ever side attacks must win." One grand charge to rally the weak hearted, instruct the ignorant, disabuse the deceived, and cause every man to register, will comc pletely demoralize and rout our foes. They will not register a vote if they see that we mean to do so.

Only the most miserable cowardice on our part can lose this fight. If in any of the dark and barbarian parishes assassins still control the courts and officers of the law, and threaten us, there is the first place to go. Let them kill; one life more or less, from our ranks matters little to the great cause. Every drop of our blood so spilled by these wretches will fall like seed to the ground, and raise up a hundred good Republicans. The ghosts of our murdered martyrs will rise from their graves and drive the conscience stricken murderers not only from the polls, but from the land forever.

Mississippi.

There are two church items of importance connected with our work in Mississippi, to which we call the attion of our readers. The first is the Howard Orphan Asylum, located at Lauderdale, an account of which may be found in the letter of our able correspondent, Rev. James Lynch. This institution may soon be secured to our church for the sum of $2000. Will not some benevolent friend send on the money? How more certainly can we reach the colored people and elevate the whole race, than by the proper training of their children. Slavery has thrown upon each Southern State thousands of orphans, and war has added many more. Our own asylum, located in this city, is a blessed success, and we rejoice that it was our good fortune to aid in founding the first orphan asylum in America connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church; and we most earnestly urge the importance of such institutions in each of the old slave States. Louisiana, Mississippi, and which State will be next on the roll of honor?

The $2000 can be sent to us at New Orleans, or to the Rev. James Lynch, Jackson, Mississippi.

The other item of interest is, the publication of a monthly paper called the Colored Citizens' Monthly, published and edited by Rev. James Lynch, presiding elder of Jackson District, Mississippi. This is the third church paper started in the South by our missionaries, namely: The New Orleans Advocate, was first published in 1866; then followed the Charleston Advocate, later in the same year, and now the Colored Citizens' Monthly. This indicates commendable enterprise, and particularly so, when it is remembered that these papers are private enterprises, and were started without a dollar of capital; started by faith in God and the church. And we hope that we shall very soon have a church paper in each of the Southern States, at all events, within the bounds of each Annual Conference. We can not prosecute our work so successfully without the aid of the press, and that press must be in the hands of those to whom the reorganization of our church has been committed. We promise to become a paid subscriber to each new paper started in connection with our work in the South.

Mr. Lynch's paper has a fine appearance, but we object to a part of its name. It is called the Colored Citizens' Monthly. This is perpetuating caste in the church, against which Mr. Lynch speaks so earnestly. He would have good reason for objecting to a journal called the "White Citizens' Monthly," because such a designation favors caste. It may be said that the blacks have so long been without a journal of their own, that it is necessary to so designate a journal published in their interests. But this smells of caste. Let the offensive word colored be obliterated. Call it the "Citizen's Monthly," or the Mississipi Advocate, and add, if you choose, edited by a colored man, but for the benefit of all citizens without regard to race, color, or previous condition.

The Trial of Rev. J. P. Hubbard.

The trial of Rev. Mr. Hubbard, an Episcopal clergyman of Westerly, Rhode Island, for exchanging pulpits with Rev. Mr. Denison, a Baptist clergyman of the same place, commenced on the eighth of September, in the city of Providence.

It has been concluded, as we see by the last number of the Protestant Churchman, but the decision has not been made known.

Hon. Mr. Thurston and Rev. John Cotton Smith, D. D., were associated together in the defense. Mr. John H. Stiness and Judge Bradley for the presentors, or persecutors we might well call them.

The hearing occupied several days, during which the court, which consisted of five jurors, listened with patience and attention.

Their rulings were fair and honorable, and commanded confidence. Hard speeches were avoided, the proceedings being dignified and quiet.

The defense seemed clearly to show that the eleventh canon, which it was claimed had been violated by Mr. Hubbard in allowing Mr. Denison to preach in his church, was simply a part of a body of laws designed to guard against imposters. That it supplemented certain canons requiring a list of clergymen to be made out by the Bishops, and a certificate to be given to each minister whose name was received upon this list; that in the early history of the church, when these laws were passed, there were many Episcopal ministers whose lives were so bad they were not fit to attend to ministerial duties. The canon, therefore, was a provision, not so much to protect them from clergymen of other denominations, but the unworthy clergymen of their own church. They invoked the rule of law, that statutes should be restricted to the mischief they were intended to remedy. They claimed that the General Convention had never undertaken to decide one way or the other on the question of occasional services by ministers of other denominations.

They further claimed that no minister of the Protestant Episcopal Church of America is required to believe or teach the exclusive validity of Episcopal orders. That it was, therefore, allowable for Rev. Mr. Hubbard, and not contrary to the doctrines of the church, to regard Rev. Mr. Denison (being an acknowledged minister of the Baptist communion) as a lawful minister, priest, or presbyter, in the Church of Christ, and, therefore, authorized to perform any act appropriate to the office of a minister of the Gospel.

It would seem that the defense made so clear a case that when the verdict is made known, it will be in accordance with justice and common sense. That is a verdict which will, in substance, be, not guilty. Yet there is a possiblity that such may not be the case, but on the contrary, a spirit of bigotry and intolerance find sway. We shall soon know, and then may have more to say on the matter.

Day of Fasting and Prayer.

On the 8th instant, a meeting of ministers of the Gospel, and others, was held in the Free Mission Baptist church, according to previous notice in the papers, to consider the propriety of setting apart a day for fasting and prayer, on which to implore the blessing of Almighty God upon the nation, to grant unto us peace and prosperity, and give success to the great party of liberty, progress, and peace, of which General Grant is the candidate for President of the United States, as he has said in his letter of acceptance, that he should, if elected; endeavor to administer all laws in good faith, with a view of having peace everywhere and affording protection to all.

Being called to order, Rev. Mr. Satchell was elected President and J. F. Winston Secretary. Ten clergymen and ten laymen were present. C. Satchell. W. W. Moody, M. Allen, G. W. Steptoe, J. F. Winston, William Hortair, John Kofel, C. F. Lad, David Bates, M. Lowden, William Satchell, W. H. Pemberton, R. J. Cromwell, Mr. Wyatt, and others. Short addresses were made by gentlemen present, and a committee of five on resolutions was appointed, namely: R. J. Cromwell, W. H. Pemberton, C. F. Lad, C. W. Steptoe, and J. F. Winston.

The chairman of the committee reported the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, God has vouchsafed to us a Republican form of government, under which all the people are free and are endowed with citizenship and certain inalienable rights, privileges and protection, and

Whereas, The maintenance of those rights depend greatly upon the election of a loyal, liberty loving President, Vice-President, and Congress, therefore be it

Resolved, That Christians of all denominations should unite in seeking divine aid, imploring success to the great and holy cause of liberty, peace and pursuit of happiness, in this great struggle at the polls.

Resolved, That the ministers and people of the different Churches in this city and throughout the State of Louisiana, do recommend the observance of Sunday, October 3, 1868, as a day of solemn fasting and prayer, for the above stated object.

On motion the meeting adjourned.

J. F. WINSTON,
Secretary.

Improvements in New Orleans.

Money is plenty in New Orleans, if we may judge from the large number of elegant residences in process of erection, and the remodeling of old structures. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are being expended on St. Charles street, which is destined to be the Fifth Avenue of the Crescent City. On either side of this spacious avenue, from Jackson street, to the very limits of Jefferson City, palatial homes will soon be ready for their affluent occupants: while on nearly all the main thoroughfares of our city, old houses are being made new. Indeed, to such an extent are these improvements being carried, that the number of mechanics in New Orleans is not sufficient to meet the demand, even at the very high prices given for labor. This speak well for the wealth of our property holders, and is a rebuke to those who keep up the cry that "our people are poverty stricken under radical rule." Where does the capital come from? Some one has money and is willing to invest it in real estate in New Orleans, notwithstanding the radicals are in power. And we hold that these investments of our tax payers are the best expression of their faith in the future of our country, and are a refutation of that standard slander, that if Grant is elected and the radicals continue in power, property in the South is forever ruined. Men are not apt to invest their money in a sinking ship or in a city going to ruin. We therefore give such improvements as another illustration that men talk one way and act another: that they speak of inevitable adversity, but act as certain of prosperity. Let the improvements go on.

Conspiracy.

This crime is well defined in the statute books. The General Assembly had better define it anew and more rigorously.

To the merchants, clerks, lawyers, and respectable men of this city and State who have enrolled themselves under the new rebel flag of the White Camelia, who have bound themselves together by horrible oaths to commit wholesale massacre and treason, we have a sober word.

Messieurs, what you are about is a penitentiary offense. Traitors are proscribed for breaking faith with one another. It might be very inconvenient, some day, to trace up a murder or a massacre from the besotted foreign hirelings who commit the foul deed, to the respectable grand commander who ordered it, or to the respectable midnight conclave at ——— street, who planned, hatched, instigated, and paid for it. You, then, my dear Mr. D. B——, who have quite a large rent-role, and you, my gallant Col. Z——, who are a prominent and rising young lawyer, and you, my nice young hopeful, who are the chief clerk in the large establishment of Messrs. Periwinkle, would hate very much to have the role of your circle published, together with its proceedings for the last few weeks. We have them and they will be published, if you don't do as we think your good sense and better inclinations have already prompted you to do—break off from your dangerous conspiracy with your lawless, murderous, and unprincipled associates.

We mean what we say. A word to the wise

HISTORY OF THE NEW SCHOOL. By Samuel J. Baird, D. D. Published by Claxten, Remsen & Hafferfinger, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, pp. 564.

A History of the New School and of the questions involved in the disruption of the Presbyterian Church, in 1838. To bring out fully the points at issue, the author gives some account of this denomination in its early days, both in England and America; of the errors that occasionally crept into the same, or that were proclaimed by different ministers of that denomination, and the trouble arising therefrom. But the work is principally devoted to the matters which more immediately resulted in the division of their church, in 1838, and the part that prominent men thereof, such as Barnes, Patton, Spring, Breckinridge, Rice and others took in the controversy. It can hardly fail to interest the church, especially the different Presbyterian branches.

Close Communion.

Our common Christianity has won a victory in the late rebuke administered to the Rev. Doctor Lincoln, by the Warren Association of Baptists. The Rev. Doctor Bigot Lincoln introduced resolutions censuring Brother Malcolm, pastor of the second Newport Baptist Church, for communing with Methodist and Congregationalist brethren, which resolution failed to pass. Let our Baptist friends go on in this way of righteousness, and ere long husbands and wives, brothers and sisters, parents and children, who may differ about modes of baptism, will be allowed to meet together around the table of their common Lord. We copy from our North Western a portion of the discussion with its judicious comments:

"The defeat of this measure was signalized by remarkable testimony adduced from the pen of the late Dr. Wayland, and by speeches from Dr. Caswell, President of Brown University, Dr. Caldwell, of the First Baptist Church, Providence, Rhode Island, Dr. Woods and others. The drift of these observations went to prove that immersion is not a Scriptural pre-requisite to the holy communion.

In the course of the discussion Dr. Caldwell said:

"If we are going to say to our associated Churches: 'Brethren, we believe this principle is according to the word of God—whover violates it is a sinner against the Lord.' Then one should bring a 'thus saith the Lord for it.' I say the doctrine for restricted communion is not one for which we can bring a thus saith the Lord."

In the course of his remarks Dr. Caswell said:

"The first objection which I have to this resolution is, that it says that this Association, in common with Christians of every name, accepts the divinely appointed order of Baptism before the Lord's Supper. Brethren, I object to that upon this ground, that it is not a divinely appointed order. I call for the declaration of its being divinely appointed. It is not, so far as I know, in the Scriptures. If it is I have never seen it. Show me where it is divinely appointed that the person shall be baptized before he shall go to communion."

"Again, the resolution says, 'contrary to the universal custom of Christendom.' Well, it is not a universal custom. There are great exceptions to it—exceptions by men of the highest mark, and the greatest wisdom. I quote simply Robert Hall, that is enough. Robert Hall did not hold that baptism of any kind was a Scriptural requisite to communion. I presume you will find hundreds and thousands of devout Christian men, members of Baptist Churches in Great Britian, who do not hold that it is anywhere appointed and required in the Scriptures that baptism shall precede the communion.

"I am not prepared to disfellowship a fellow Christian who doubts that baptism was by Divine appointment an order held to be a necessary prerequisite to the Lord's Supper. I am not bound to disfellowship him for having that doubt in his mind. Shall we drive brothers from our communion because they do not give their adherence to a principle which has not the express word of Christ for it."

Nothing that has occurred for years past will tend more to enlighten and liberalize the Baptist denomination than Dr. Lincoln's defeat before the Warren Association. Open communion will be immensely advantaged. We hail the indication with joy, and hope the time may come when this wall of partition will be torn down.

Intelligence from Our Mission Rooms.

INSIDE VIEW OF OUR MISSIONARY TREASURY.—In 1865 the General Missionary Committee appropriated one million dollars for carrying on our great missionary work at home and abroad during 1866. They were enabled to pay this heavy appropriation by the large surplus that had accumulated in the treasury. At their meeting in 1866 they appropriated one million and thirty thousand dollars for missionary work in 1867; and they were enabled to pay so much of this large appropriation as was required by a balance still in the treasury. At their meeting in 1867 they found the missionary treasury heavily in debt, and reduced the aggregate appropriation to $850,000. In this sum is an item of $178,524 87 for outstanding liabilities. It is a matter of deep concern to notice, that while the heavy balance in the treasury at the General Missionary meeting in November, 1865, has been gradually consumed, the actual contributions to the treasury have gradually diminished, and the necessary consequence will be a heavy debt upon the treasury at the close of 1868. The Finance Committee of the Board foresaw the coming pressure upon the treasury, and advised the General Missionary Committee of their opinion at its meeting in November, 1867. This led to a free and general conversation of the committee in regard to the treasury, in which, says the minute of the committee, "It seemed to be the judgment of the members of the committee representing the Church at large, that a large increase on the contributions for the present year (1867) might safely be anticipated for the year to come," (1868). All seemed to think that the decline in the missionary contributions was only temporary, and that the contributions in 1868 would show a good increase. The General Committee, therefore, proceeded to make liberal appropriations for 1868, and the Bishops promptly and unanimously gave their sanction to the appropriations proposed. The concurrence of the Bishops was expressed in the following language, addressed to the Board and the Genral Committee in writing:

We, with you, have been pained to learn that the income of the Missionary society for the past year has not equaled in amount the sum anticipated by many of its friends at our meeting twelve months ago. Yet we have good reason to hope that the causes which led to this result were transient, and that it did not arise from diminished interest in the success of the missionary cause on the part of our people.

Confiding in the zeal and liberality of the church, and trusting that by adhering faithfully to the plan laid down in the Discipline, for the collection of funds to carry forward our missionary work, both at home and abroad, the necessary amount will be realized, we cordially concur in the appropriations made by the General Missionary Committee and the Board for the support of missions the coming year.

NOTE.—Bishop Scott was absent.

We have given this inside view of the opinions and feelings of the General Missionary Committee (which includes the Bishops and Board) that the church may see this one all-absorbing fact, namely, that the time has come for the resumption of our usual missionary activity, if we would preserve the great vigor and glorious results of our missionary cause.

MEN OF WAR.—We have two Swedish frigates in our harbor at New York; they are on a voyage to test their respective abilities as sailers, and at the same time afford opportunity for the education of the young candidates for promotion in the naval service. Some of the officers on board one of the vessels have been in this port before, and found the "pearl of great price" in the Bethel ship. So anxious were some pious seamen at home to make this voyage, when they learned that it was for New York, that they offered to serve without wages if they might but be chosen. Some of them had heard our Brother Witting preach at Carlskrona, the naval station of Sweden. They attended worship at the Bethel ship last Sabbath, and each mess on board will receive a supply of our books and tracts through Pastor Hedstrom.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.—It is the custom of all our foreign missions to observe the week of prayer, and with the happiest results to themselves and to their work. We know the same to be true of many of our central cities and large towns thoughout our home work. The general mode has been to give the afternoons and evenings to public prayer-meetings and addresses from pastors and leading laymen on the subjects specified for the occasion. The evening meetings have been largely occupied by addresses from officers of the leading missionary societies, who have been called on after the following manner, namely: on the evening on which the meeting is to be held in the Presbyterian Church, Old School, an account of the Presbyterian Board; when in the New School, the American Home Missions; when in the Congregational, the American Board of Christian Foreign Missions; when in the Baptist, their Foreign and Domestic work; when in the Reformed, an account of the foreign and domestic work of their church; and so with the Methodists; and if the Episcopalians will unite, on account of theirs. It will thus be seen that every evening may be wisely and well occupied; the whole church fully informed of the work that is in progress for our common Lord. As the special subjects for daily prayer, have been wisely left to each locality or church, the pastors now have ample time in which to forecast and be ready.

A STRONG AUXILIARY.—It is not always that we have one with a face as beautiful as this of the Sunday School Journal. We have before us the first number of the first volume of the new series under its new editor, Rev. J. H. Vincent. In this prettiest of all the serials issued by Carlton & Lanahan, on page sixteen we find some suggestive missionary matter: the Joliet Sunday School Missionary Society has a large paper box containing a nest of small ones, on which the name of a class is written. The Sands street society has a tin box, japanned, for the treasurer, filled with small ones for the classes, japanned, and the name of each class put on in gilt letters. Brother Vincent suggests that a certain number of classes form a section, say classes one, two, three and four, more or less, according to the number of classes in the school, adopt the mission in Africa; another two or three the mission in South America; another China, and so on—China, Germany, Scandinavia, Bulgaria, India, domestic and third class missions. The infant class to have the first choice as to which mission it will take. Let each section constitute a committee to give information by addresses, recitations, missionary readings, etc. This course will awaken interest, increase collections, and kindle enthusiasm. The Sunday School Journal will, we judge, be found in at least every Methodist Sunday School, one copy, at least, to be preserved by the Secretary and bound at the close of the volume as a permanent volume in the library.

LIKE AS A SHOCK OF CORN.—Hark! a voice divides the sky: "Happy are the faithful dead!" Schureman Halstead, in Christ about fifty years, departed to be with Christ on Monday, October 5. Our recollection of this brother runs back to the time when the dew of his youth was upon him. He was a ruddy youth and fair to look upon; he was then a clerk in a mercantile establishment, and warm in his first love. Through all the forty-six years of personal knowledge that have followed, we have not known his "hope decline or love grow cold." Brother Halstead was one of the managers of the Missionary Society as early as 1828, and has been steady in his devotion and service through the long period of forty years. Of the officers and Managers elected with him, forty-two in number, but two survive, both of whom still sustain the relation of managers. We attribute his unusual zeal, love and persistence in the cause of Christ to his Huguenotic extraction; his connection with the same by early marriage into the family of the blessed Gilbert Coutant, and his association with that rare body of men, with Elias Boudinot at their head, who originated the American Bible Society, of which he was also a manager at the time of his departure.

Servant of God, well done!
Thy glorious warfare's past:
The battle's fought, the race is won,
And thou art crowned at last.

The Huguenot Galley Slave.

Having been greatly interested in those excellent and valuable papers entitled, "Woman's Work for Jesus," I have thought an extract illustrating the sufferings of the French galley slaves, condemed for their Protestant faith, might be likewise instructive. It is taken from a little book, "The Huguenot Galley Slave," from the French of Jean Marteilhe, lately published by Leypoldt & Holt, New York. M. Michelet says of it, "It is a book of the first order, distinguished by the charming naivite of the recital, by its angelic sweetness, written as if between earth and heaven. Why has it never been reprinted?"

The author was taken while attempting to escape from France, (where his mother was subjected by the Duke de la Force, in the midst of twenty-two wretches, to the most horrible tortures) and condemned by the King. He thus alludes to their journey, when attached to the great chain. "We arrived at Charenton about six in the evening, by moonlight. It froze terribly hard. The difficulty which we had in walking, and the excessive weight of our chains (which were 150 pounds for each, as our captain himself said), had warmed us after the great cold which we had suffered in the court yard of the Tournelle so that, on arriving at Charenton, we were as wet with perspiration as if we had been plunged into water. Here they lodged us in the stable of an inn; but, alas! what a lodging—and what a rest they prepared for us, to refresh us after this great fatigue! We were chained up to this stable in such a way that we could with difficulty sit down, and then only on a dung-heap; for as the captain conducts the chain at his own expense as far as Marseilles, receiving there twenty crowns a head for each man, he spares even straw, and we had none during the whole journey. Here, then, they left us to rest (though such a rest was almost worse than the fatigues we had endured) till nine o'clock in the evening, to prepare another scene for us, the most cruel that can be imagined, as I am going to describe. However, our four gentlemen from Paris, who had followed us to Charenton, and were lodging in the same inn, had engaged the largest apartment there, and ordered a supper for thirty persons, reckoning that the captain would keep his word with them. But how different an entertainment from that which they expected was the one we had to take part in, and they to behold! It makes me shudder every time I think of it.

At nine o'clock, when it was bright moonlight, with a very hard frost and a north wind, they unfastened our chains, and turned us all out of the stable into a spacious court yard, inclosed by a wall, before the inn. They strung of the chain on one side of this court yard, then they ordered us, huge whips in their hands, blows from which fell like hail upon the slothful ones, to strip off all our clothes and to put them down at their feet. We were forced to obey, and we twenty-two, as well as the whole chain, submitted to this cruel treatment. After we had stripped perfectly naked, the chain was ordered to march across to the other end of the court, where we were exposed to the north wind for two long hours, during which time the archers searched and examined all our clothes under the pretext of looking for knives, files and other tools, which might be used for cutting or breaking the chains. One may judge if the money that was found escaped the hands of these harpies. They took any thing that they fancied—handkerchiefs, linen, (if it was at all good), snuff-boxes, scissors, etc., and kept every thing, returning nothing; and when the poor wretches asked for what had been taken from them, they were overwhelmed with cuffs and blows from their muskets and sticks. The examination of our clothes being made, the chain was ordered to march back to the place where they had left them. But oh, cruel spectacle! the quarter part of these unfortunates, ourselves included, were so stiffened by the piercing cold to which we had been exposed, that it was impossible to walk, even that short distance, across to our clothes. Then blows from the cudgels and the whips rained down on all sides; and this horrible treatment not succeeding in reviving the poor frozen bodies; which were heaped one upon another, some dead, others dying, the barbarous archers dragged them by the chains round their necks like carrion, their bodies streaming with blood from the blows they received. That evening, or the next morning, eighteen died."

Helping Children to Lie.

Under this head, Mr. Beecher in the New York Ledger, discourses as follows:

That lying is bound up in the hearts of children, it would not become me to deny. But certainly it is often united. Indeed, there are few who will not tell lies—the testimony of their parents to the contrary notwithstanding.

But, of two facts I am reasonably sure. First, that children's falsehoods are often as much the parents' fault as their own; and secondly, that children do not lie as much as grown up people do, and seem to do so only from want of skill and long practice.

Lies are instruments of attack or defence, and so may be classed as offensive or defensive. Children's lies are almost always defensive, and for the most part are employed in defending themselves against parents, nurses, elder brothers and sisters, and school masters. Being weak and helpless, concealment is in their case, as in the animal kingdom, almost the only means of defense. Children's lies are, in multitudes of instances, mere attempts to hide themselves from sharp censure or sharper whipping.

Take a case from life. Master Harry is sent to mill one day in winter, but with injunctions not to stop and skate. But the pond was so inviting, the boys there were so merry, they so persuasively coaxed him, that it was not in his social little heart to refuse. Of course he skates longer than he intended. On reaching home he is questioned:

"Why have you been so long, Harry?"

"O—the grist was not ground, and I had to wait."

"Did you go on to the pond?"

"No, sir, I didn't."

Here is a pretty tangle of lies! The old gentleman runs his hand into the bag, and finds the meal stone cold. He rides over to the mill to inquire about matters, and finds that the grist had been ground the day before; he rides home, and calls up the urchin, who knew that a grist now was to be ground that would be hot enough! Here was disobedience first, then a lie; and next, upon cross-questioning, a secondary lie, explanatory and defensory of the first. Of course, punishment was earned and deserved. But the boy did not lie because he liked to, or because he was indifferent to the truth. He was suborned by fear. He shrank from punishment, and tried to hide behind a lie. The refuge proved treacherous, as it ought to have done.

But, now, is there no lesson to parents in this thing? Shall they hastily place their children between such unequal motives as conscience and fear The lower instincts in children are relatively far stronger than moral sentiment. Conscience is weak and unpractised, while fear is powerful, and at times literally irresistible.

The fear of pain, the fear of shame, the fear of ridicule, drive children into falsehoods. Those who govern them might, at least, remember how it was in their own cases, and so manage as to help conscience against fear, rather than by threats and sternness make the temptation irresistible.

Dress in Church.

The Detroit Press thinks that something besides the pew system, operates very powerfully in keeping many from God's house, namely, "fashionable and costly dress." It says, very sensibly:

"There has grown up a certain custom in connection with the opera, which requires what is called full dress, to avoid being remarked as odd and out of place in the brilliant audience. Consequently, many people who are able to purchase opera tickets, and yet not able to dress fashionably, do not attend the opera, because the dress has become more important, through the decree of "society," than the music. This same fashion has obtained a strong position in the churches. It really requires a considerable degree of moral courage for a man with a seedy coat, heavy boots, a bad hat, coarse linen, to enter a hundred thousand dollar church, and venture among its richly dressed congregation. He He feels out of place and uncomfortable in such an assembly. And if this is true of the masculine sex, how much more true is it of women in the masses. Feminine taste, habits of thought, and training, naturally make women keenly susceptible to marked differences in this respect. "Stand aside, we are of a higher caste than thou," stares the wife or daughter of the artisan or laborer in the face from every rich dress, elegant bonnet, or expensive shawl in the congregation. They feel as much out of place in the elegant church as in the elegant opera. God may be no respecter of persons; but the Deity is not always, or generally, felt to be so certainly present in a splendid temple as to cause the humble attendants to forget that their fellow mortals are respecters of persons according to their outward appearance. In order to make the free church experiment complete, there must be a more democratic spirit inculcated in the congregation. Plainness of apparel, less fashion, fewer outward signs of social distinction—in short, more of the mass-meeting style, and that democratic appearance which puts rich and poor, high and low, upon an easy equality for the occasion; this is as necessary as free seats and free preaching to attract the masses.

Heavy Taxes.

That common-sense philosopher, Dr. Franklin, in his day refuted an objection against large taxation by showing that our heaviest taxes are not imposed by government. In his "Way to Wealth" he represents a plain, clean old man, with white locks, called "Father Abraham," as being asked,—

"Will not these heavy taxes quite ruin the country? How shall we ever be able to pay them?"

Father Abraham replied, "Friends, the taxes are indeed very heavy; and if those laid by the government were the only ones we had to pay, we might more easily discharge them; but we have many others, and much more grevious to some of us. We are taxed twice as much by our own idleness, three times as much by our pride, and four times as much by our folly; and from these taxes the commissioners cannot ease or deliver us by allowing an abatement. However, let us hearken to good advice, and something may be done for us. 'God helps them that help themselves,' as poor Richard says."

PRANG'S AMERICAN CHROMOS

IS OIL AND WATER COLORS.

PRANG'S AMERICAN CHROMOS are fac simile re-productions of oil and water color paintings: so faithfully and skillfully done that it requires the experience of an expert to detect the difference between them and the originals.

For every purpose of decoration, for parlors, sitting rooms, nurseries, or chambers, nothing so exquicitely beautiful as these Chromos can be obtained for the same amount of money. No other ornaments of the same cost are so admirably calculated to adorn home, to cultivate a love for art among the people at large; to brighten up the dwellings of every class of our citizens, and to teach the rising generation, by their silent yet refining influence, to love the beautiful in Art and Nature. Hitherto, Art has been aristocratic in its associations, none but the wealthy classes could afford to buy fine works of art; but chromo-lithography has changed all that, and brought exquisite paintings within the reach of every family. It is doing for Art what the printing press did for Literature. Let no family, henceforth, be without a few classical books, and one or two masterly paintings. Both should be regarded as indispensable to complete a home.

Ask for them at the art stores and book stores.

Our Chromos are sent free to any address within the United States east of the Mississippi, on receipt of price. Our Journal of Popular Art, explaining how Chromos are made, mailed free. Send for a copy.

EXTRACT FROM THE "LIFE OF WASHINGTON IRVING,"

By his nephew, Pierre M. Irving, Vol. IV, page 272.

The doctor prescribed, as an experiment—what had been suggested by Dr. O. W. Holmes on his laboratory—"Jones Whitcomb's Remedy for Asthma," a teaspoonful in a wineglass of water, to be taken every four hours. A good night was the result.

In no case of purely Asthmatic character has it failed to give prompt relief, and in many cases a permanent cure has been effected. No danger need be apprehended from its use. An infant may take it with perfect safety.

[For the New Orleans Advocate.]

"A KINGDOM THAT CAN NOT BE MOVED."

Men's minds with anxious thoughts are filled.
And bodeful shadows dim the air,
The gayest hearts are strangely stilled,
The world is restless everywhere.

A muffled tramp of armed hosts,
A din of mustering war one hears,
In town and field, on hills and coasts—
Fightings within—without are fears.

The very silence brooding round,
The pause that holds the waiting air,
Has for the thoughtful soul a sound,
As of a spirit striving there.

God's spirit moves upon the deep
Of the world's heart, as, in the night
Of chaos, he whose thoughts ne'er sleep
Spake through the gloom, "Let there be light!"

And darkness and disorder still
Confuse the world within the breast,
And sensual, selfish passions fill
The heart with desperate unrest.

Pride, grovelling where it seems to rise,
And mad ambition, stalks abroad,
With brazen forehead scorn the skies,
And bid men worship them for God.

Aye, quake, ye godless, in your towns,
Though high they soar and strong they seem!
In vain ye cope with heavenly powers,
Your boast shall be a short-lived dream.

But courage, ye who, when the sound
Of war with terror shakes the lands
Ranged with the King of Truth are found,
Numbered in Prince Emanuel's bands!

Yours is the victory of peace,
The realm of never-fading light,
The glory that shall never cease,
The heavenly day that knows no night.

Come, then, in faith, come one and all,
And ready for God's conflict still,
Build each your house in this rock-wall,
On this eternal, heavenly hill.

Washington Correspondence.

Washington, October 15.

Church prosperity interests every community. Here the Methodist Church has increased her membership more or less, in every pastoral charge since our last letter.

After all the prejudice of this church against instrumental music connected with public worship, it is now very generally being introduced. One argument against it was, its supposed interference with prayer meetings connected with revivals; but all theories must be tried by facts. For two Sundays past, the penitent has bowed at the altar in the "Foundry Church," amid the stirring tones of the organ, as well as the melting strains of the people, under the inspiration of Wesley's verse. When the Holy Spirit touches heart, all outward things can be subservient.

A church suit was lately decided in Calvert county, Maryland, brought by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to obtain possession of property deeded to the Methodist Episcopal Church. The plaintiffs, among other pleas, set up the "Plan of Separation" of 1844, to justify their claim. This verily illustrates the adage "a lawyer has but one eye, and that in the back of his head;" he can see nothing but old, if not obselete laws. Judge Magruder, before whom the case was tried, however, thought otherwise, and told the plaintiffs according to their plea, that they not only had no right to that property, but had none in the State. So far as these suits have been closed in Maryland, they have been in favor of the old Church. In Virginia, the military authorities have ordered the joint occupancy of churches by the contending parties till the civil courts are reorganized. The usual argument employed by that Church has been within the Baltimore Conference, nails and hammer, screw-drivers and new locks; nor has their employment been unfrequent. Meantime, new churches are rising amid these efforts to crush out the Church of the fathers.

Archbishop Spalding has forbidden the "round" dance, the waltz and German dances, to be used by Catholics. These vulgar amusements must be at a great discount.

But does not the world move? Think of religous toleration in Spain! Our Minister, Mr. Hale, has informed the government of most important interviews with Spanish authorities, and the expectation is a recognition of the revolutionary government of Spain, at an early day.

The Dyer court martial has been suspended till November, as the people of Tennessee desired General G. H. Thomas, a member of the court, to remain there at this critical time. No doubt this is another political bubble. General Dyer will no doubt come out unscathed.

The President has ordered the statue of Washington, belonging to Louisiana, to be returned to the authorities of that State. It seems this statue was found on a wharf here, without an intelligent history, and was sent to the Interior Department.

The President has issued a proclamation relative to elections in the military districts of Virginia, Mississippi and Texas, which goes out as under Grant's orders. The law requires all orders to the army, by the President, shall be sent through the General-in-Chief, and this is done when it reaches the Adjutant General, who signs it "By command of General Grant;" but the latter may never see it; and this is true of this order.

The Chief Magistrate has also proclaimed a day of Thanksgiving, and set apart the twenty-sixth of November for that purpose. It is to be heped there will be enough of gratitude to God and reverence for magisterial authority to secure the appropriate and lofty object of this proclamation. It is alarming, as well as humiliating, to see the party character of the religion professed by so many. There are some so narrow, to say the least, who can not observe those days because requested to do so by a ruler who is not of their choice. Away with such ignorance and infidelity.

We venture to echo the rumor of Mr. Colfax's marriage, on the twenty-fifth of October, but may have to review and recall before that time, as the papers were obliged to on a similar announcement in regard to Secretary Seward.

Yesterday and to-day there have been mourning and rejoicing. The same event does not affect all people alike. The elections in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Nebraska have produced just this difference of feeling here, and the electric tongue has long since told you the same thing. The sorrow in this case is like that of the heathen on another subject, because it "is without hope." Let those who rejoice do it "with trembling." The city was remarkably quiet during the night of Tuesday, except about club head quarters and printing offices, where shouts were given as telegrams announced the success of the respective parties. The figures, however, were too heavy on one side, to induce universal pleasure. There is no fun in see-sawing unless one goes up as well as down.

A specimen of liberty of speech and franchise is furnished in the recent mobbing of a Washington train of cars, in Baltimore, as published in the Baltimore American, of this date. Such an infamy to be perpetrated under the shadow of the Capitol!

Encouragement to Prayer.

M. ANNESLEY.

The Bible abounds in answers to prayer, and we may turn over its pages from place to place and strengthen our trust in God, the very God who says his children are dear as the apple of his eye.

Besides, there are the numerous requests made to Jesus in person, which always received his immediate attention; and does he love us any less since his sufferings on the cross for our salvation? No; the feeblest cry from any part of the habitable earth claims his love, and he is ready to bestow it in answer to prayer. It is true, we must mean what we say, be sincere, earnest and specific in our requests. God must not be mocked by unmeaning utterance before him. He knows how helpless we are, and that from our necessity we are calling upon him It is half the answer to feel an intense yearning to get in secret before him; that is the spirit helping our infirmities. Christ is our great intercessor on high, and prayer must go up from the earth for him to present to the Father in our behalf, and if we do not pray for ourselves some one must pray for us. We are living under some one's prayers, if not our own—"help comes out of Zion," the Lord's people are the preserving power on the earth, the salt, savor, &c. Our daily and nightly ordinary mercies we receive in anwer to prayer, for we know not the measure of them in our preservation from evil. A good woman and her husband were out on a drive one day, and were both thrown out and much injured, when a friend called to sympathize with her she said it was the only time in ten years that she had entered her carriage without asking God's special care and protection, but somehow she had neglected doing it that day of the disaster. And we might recal and listen to numerous incidents, showing preserving mercy in answer to previous prayer. A little, feeble boy, jumped out of bed and said, "I must pray for my papa and mamma, they are on the railroad to-night;" he did so, and about that very hour the train in which those parents were was mercifully saved from a dreadful calamity by a timely discovery of a coupling unsafe, &c. Every day we are receiving answers to prayer, and it helps to keep us watchful to notice and give thanks for them. We see our friends awakened and converted, and the luke-warm brought back to their pavilian of strength in answer to our prayers or those of some other Christian friend, and he cannot cease to rejoice over any one's answers to prayer, for just so much we have gained in our determination to prevail in our cases.

Prayer always has its reflex influence upon ourselves. Alone with God we learn to see light, in his light; to think as he thinks, to feel as he feels; to be calm and peaceful as he is; and we return from our closets with a new impetus heavenward. All the wordly influence around us is neutralized by the inward divine savor. No blessing is so lasting, so durable, as one found alone with God.

Our pastor's labors are more useful and seasonable to us, if he lives in our prayers; we can thus sympathize with him in trials without intrenching upon his precious time. We must never think our prayers "poor things;" we have no Bible warrant for such mock humility; all kind of prayer we are commanded to use continually, incessantly.

"Praying breath was never spent in vain." The Old Testament enjoins prayer, by its power and example, and the New commands us to pray in almost every style of precept and, while the promises are abundant to stir our souls to great activity in this duty. One thing we should do with regard to past prayer, not lose its power amid great trials, but hold fast and continue to plead till death or conquests decides the labor.

We are apt to grow weary and faint, and need all the New Testament contains to resist these infirmities.

Besides, again, those who pray most and regularly in the closet are best prepared for the social duties of prayer, whether at the family altar, or in the prayer meeting. Prayer is never irksome or a duty out of place, with those who have been punctual with Christ in secret. Blessed is the privilege of prayer.

The Gleaner.

Fair was the morn which brightened Moab's fertile plain. Through stately palms the golden sunlight flashed on vintage and on yellow grain. Acanthus and accacia waved in the west winds summer sighs, while far off, like soft music, rose the voice of Amon's river on its slow journey to the Dead Sea going. Fair was the morn and fair the scene on which it shone. A group of three gazed with tearful eyes over this, the land which held their buried treasures. Two girlish forms, and one on whom the years had left their weight of gloom—a widowed wife and mother; and to them both, she that was oldest, the sorrowing Naomi spake. "To mine own land of Judah do I go, but stay thou here, here in thy father's land, thy native home." And Orpah chose to stay with her people and her gods; but Ruth more constant, deaf to remonstrance, said: "Thy lot is mine, my mother, I will go with thee."

And this was she—the gleaner—for when to Bethlehem they had come, these wandering two, summer had flung her richest coronals upon the fields of Palestine, and many ripening harvests stood ready for the reapers' gathering hands.

At early dawn, at midday and at eve was seen that fair young stranger gathering golden sheaves; while each succeeding time that twilight shadows fell, the mother to the daughter gently said: "Child, where hast thou gleaned to-day?"

Long years have rolled away; old, both their graves; but yet that query which the Judean mother put, our guardian spirits might, with still small voice, repeat—child where hast thou gleaned to-day.

Gleaners are all of earth's children, gleaners in life. Great souls there have been, who have gleaned with care, full sheaves of knowledge, and added to the garner vast of science, not without toil; but reason beckoned, minds crowned with genius said "I will go with thee." Following through secret labyrinths of mystery, gleaned with success in fields of stern philosophy; receiving for just reward the world's sincere applause, and for their epitaphs—"Since they who live to some great end do never die, here lie the wise who yet do live."

Gleaners are all of earth's children. Imaginative souls there have been, who, with purpose lofty and increasing ardor, have gleaned in fields of thought, sheaves rare and beautiful, rich germs of poesy with which to grace the garner rich of literature. The muse with silvery voice enchanted, they followed where she led, and when life's silver chord was loosed, she gave them for their constancy a wreath of laurel. Many have gleaned in fields of ideal sheaves, wrought with fantasy, delicate, spiritual, fair to fancy; spirits like Raphael and Angelo said, "I will go with thee:" devotedly followed her mutable wanderings, toiled morn, noon and night, and when they had finished their work with their hard earned success, decked the temples of art. Many have gleaned in the fields of the real. Varied improvements and ingenious inventions, the result of their toil, sheaves which they gave to the millions for practical use, and died, blessed by the millions for gleaning so faithfully, usefully, well.

Gleaners are all of earth's children. Many glean sheaves light and worthless, of dry twigs and leaves, live and die, neither blessing mankind nor by them are blessed. Gleaners, like Ruth; but she followed right, they follow wrong; she gleaned the substance, they gleaned the chaff.

Many the fields with their harvests spread wide. Every age brings work for the age; every year brings work for the year, every day brings work for the day. Earnest, God given work, to bind our own sheaves and lighten the burdens of those who faint by the way, weak, sad and weary; work for the head and the heart. It is ours to glean until death, gleaning yesterday, to-day and to-morrow; in the past, the present and future; either of chaff or of substance. When our labor is done, when the shadows of the infinite gather around us, and God's messenger asks for our gleanings, be it ours then to have a sheaf of true wisdom, bound with the strong bonds of right, and decked with the blossoms of truth—"a sheaf for the garner of Heaven."

From the Churches.

Rev. Mr. Bryan writes us from St. Martinsville, with report of Opelousas Quarterly Conference:

I left St. Martinsville on the 25th of September. We had prayer meeting the same evening, at Brother White's, in Vermilionville. The work is going on well in Lafayette, Next day I went on to Opelousas, arriving at twelve o'clock. A great Republican meeting and barbecue was in progress. I saw the procession pass and then went on to Washington, the place appointed for our Conference. It was a long ride of fifty-five miles. Brother Jackson was waiting for me, but many of the members were at the mass meeting. Saturday afternoon the business was attended to and the minutes are here forwarded for publication. Sunday morning the Sunday school service was held. Young Mr. Jackson sung with the children and heard their lessons. They answered well. At the love feast many of the people seemed happy, but few told of their love to God. After preaching Brother Jackson thought we ought to have a meeting for mourners. I then administered the Lord's Supper to about forty members. At night God's spirit was with us in power, but sinners were stubborn. After sermon I made a demonstration to the sinners, told them Christ had died for them, and they did not care, but provoked his anger. I told them the time was coming when we would have to leave them, that God would not always strive with them. I walked down the aisle and labored hard, but they all sat in a maze, not knowing what to do. At last eight or ten young men came up trembling and gave me their hands; four of them fell down at the altar, but the others went back to their seats. Brother Jackson works hard; has hard work here. He went out into the country, bought lumber, made his pulpit and altar himself. Everything is so disturbed here that out of two hundred and forty members only forty came to quarterly meeting. Monday early I left for home; coming through Opelousas I saw there was a great excitement Three men went into our church where Mr. Bently teaches the colored school, closed the doors behind them, and ordered the children to stay inside, then drew their pistols and proceeded to beat Mr. Bentley. I went in and saw him. Many people had gathered around, as there was great fear of rioting. I soon left for Lafayette. They had an excllent meeting on Sunday. Twenty-one mourners were forward, and one was converted. Religion is greatly revived there, but alas, no church to meet in.

The third quarterly Conference of the Opelousas circuit was held September 28, 1868, in the Washington Methodist Episcopal church. Rev. J. M. Bryan, Chairman, Edward Jackson, Jr., Secretary; seven members present. No complaints or appeals. Pastor reported three appointments—Washington, Opelousas, Bayou Teche. Total members, 290; baptisms, 8 adults, 23 infants; 2 marriages; 6 conversions. Collected for church purposes during the quarter, $19 00. Nothing raised for the preachers. Two Sunday schools, 160 scholars. Two day schools.

Brother Moses Adams, the stationed preacher at Jackson, Mississippi, writes that he had just returned at that date, October 5, from a trip fifty miles east of Jackson, on the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad. He says, "Brother Lynch, the Presiding Elder, and myself left Jackson last Friday morning. I go to Forrest to preach, where he had previously organized a society of the Methoist Episcopal Church, and Brother Lynch to go to De Kalb, about fifty miles north of Meridian and twenty-five miles west of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. He had a rough road to travel and among enemies, but we hope he will get back safe. He went to organize our Church there, having been sent for by them. I preached on Saturday at Forrest. I was to go to Hillsboro, eight miles north of Forrest, on Sunday, but a rain of twenty-four hours' duration prevented. I therefore remained at Forrest and preached there. We had a good time. Seven persons professed to find peace in Christ and were baptized; eight joined the church. Three children were baptized. Brother Lynch organized a small society here a few months ago, and now there are about one hundred members. We have a Sunday school of fifty scholars and a day school taught by the pastor, a local preacher, Brother Moore, of forty-eight scholars. I think we could get one thousand members in Scott county, if we were to go out after them. The colored people are trying to get themselves homes on the public lands.

Can a Child Come to Christ.

Hattie R. was an only child. Her father was a devoted minister, and the care of little Hattie devolved upon her mother, an earnest Christian woman, who early sought to sow good seed in the mind of her little one.

When Hattie was five years old there was much religious interest in the congregation, and many were led to the Savior. As Hattie's mother and a Christian friend were talking of the great things God was doing they perceived the bitter weeping of little Hattie.

"What is it, my child?" the mother asked. "O, mamma, I have done so many naughty things, and I am afraid I shall dle."

The lady then took her leave and the mother was alone with her child and the Savior, the hearer of prayer. Taking the little one in her arms, the mother said, "Hattie, do you feel that you are a sinner?"

"O, yes, mamma."

"Well, what should we do when we feel that we have offended God?"

"Ask him to forgive us."

"God tells us that he will forgive us when we ask Him. He tells us he loves to have little children come to him. I should be grieved if my little daughter did not trust me. It is just so with Jesus. He wants you to give your heart to him. Shall we ask God to help you to come to him now?"

The two knelt down, and the mother offered a fervent prayer that God would make this little one his own.

Hattie then poured out her heart in the following prayer: "O, Savior, won't you forgive me for all the naughty things I have done, and make me your little girl, and help me to be good all the time, and take me to heaven when I die?"

When they arose from their knees Hattie was still weeping. After further conversation they knelt again, and the mother besought the Savior to heal the heart he had broken. Still Hattie continued to weep, and her mother, taking her in her arms, said, "So my little girl cannot believe that Jesus will forgive her when he says he will. The Savior means just what he says."

A third time they knelt in prayer. When they rose up from their knees, Hattie looked up through the tears and said, "Mamma, there is a paper in papa's study that tells us all about it; let me get it." She was gone but a moment, and returned with a Child's Paper, and pointed to the article, which was a simple invitation to little children to come to Christ, assuring them in Scripture language that he would certainly receive them.

From that time Hattie's mind seemed to be at rest. She loved prayer, and seemed to take a delight in talking of Jesus. When alone with her mother she would frequently say, "Ma, let's have a prayer meeting."

Future months and years gave sweet evidence that the work in the heart of this little one was the genuine work of the Holy Spirit. She lived to her Savior. Being called to severe suffering, she bore all with submission. "It is my Father," she would say; "let him do what seemeth good."

Do not parents and teachers limit God when they feel that the little ones committed to their care cannot be led to Christ? To the question, "How soon should we begin to love God?" a little girl gave this answer: "As soon as we know who God is."

Curfew Bells.

Many have heard of the "curfew bell," but not all know its origin. Its history runs back to the time of William the Conqueror, who ordered a bell to be rung about sundown in summer, and at eight o'clock in the evening in winter, at which time fires and lights were to be put out, and the people to remain within doors, and penalties were imposed upon those who neglected or refused to comply with the law. This was called the "curfew," a word derived from the French couvre feu—cover fire—and so the appropriateness of the name is readily seen. The old King has been generally charged with instituting this custom in order to impress upon his subjects a sense of their abject condition. But, as the "curfew bell" was rung in France long before William's time, as a safeguard against fires, it is not improbable that he brought the custom with him into England from the Continet, and that he has been slandered as to his motives. At any rate he has sins enough to answer for without this. In the sixteenth century "bellmen" were added to the night-watch in London. They went through the streets ringing their bells and crying, "take care of fire and candle; be kind to the poor, and pray for the dead." It was the bellman's duty, also, to bless the sleepers as he passed their doors. In "Il Penseroso" Milton refers to this custom:

"The bellman's drowsy charm,
To bless the doors from mighty harm."

Poets have often referred to the curfew, or cover fire, bell. Gray begins his beautiful "Elegy" with—

"The curfew tolls the knell of parting day."

Longfellow, too, has a pretty little poem telling the story of this bell with charming simplicity:

"Solemnly, mournfully,
Dealing its dole,
The curfew bell
Is beginning to toll.

Cover the embers,
Put out the light;
Toil comes with the morning,
And rest with the night.

Dark grow the windows,
And quenched is the fire;
Sound fades in silence,
All footsteps retire.

No voice in the chambers,
No sound in the hall;
Sleep and oblivion
Reign over all."

King William died, and the original obligations of the curfew were at last removed about the time of Henry I, in 1100; but the custom of ringing an evening bell is still kept up in England, with variations as to the hour.

The nine "o'clock bell"—familiar to most New England people—which sends so many young people home and to bed, and which in the early history of our country was almost as rigidly obeyed by all, both old and young, as the old curfew, traces its origin directly to the cover-fire bell. In Longfellow's "Evangeline,"," the custom is well described:

Anon the bell from the bellfry
Rang out the hour of nine—the village curfew—and straightaway
Rose the guests and departed; and silence reigned in the household."

What Will You Say Then?

While Hopu, a young Sandwich Islander, was in America, he spent an evening in company where an infidel lawyer tried to puzzle him with difficult questions. At length the native said: "I am a poor heathen boy. It is not strange that my blunders in English should amuse you. But soon there will be a larger meeting than this, We shall all be there. They will ask us all one question, namely, 'Do you love the Lord Jesus Christ?' Now, sir, I think I can say, Yes. What will you say, sir?"

When he had stopped, all present were silent. At length the lawyer said that as the evening was far gone, they had better conclude it with prayer, and proposed that the native youth should pray. He did so; and as he poured out his heart to God, the lawyer could not conceal his feelings. Tears started from his eyes and he sobbed aloud. All present wept too; and when they separated, the words. "What will you say, sir?" followed the lawyer home, and did not leave him till he was brought to the Saviour.

"When Will they put You in the Stocks, Father?"

In one of our lovely villages, where trees, birds and flowers united in proclaiming the beauties of the country, the beer shop at the "corner" was constantly producing its usual fruit of sorrow and sadness in the homes of the cottages. The efforts of the clergyman, the schoolmaster and the Sunday school teachers, were constantly being marred by the bad influence of the beer shop.

One poor drunkard—once a bright-eyed little fellow in the village school, who, but for the evil example of an intemperate father, might have become a clever and useful man—who had so often been fined by the magistrates for being drunk, was at length put in the village stocks, close by the gate of the fine old church.

It was a very sad sight. The villagers were gathered round, looking on, some with pity, some in derision, and others in disgust. The beadle, fall of his office, was a prominent figure in the group.

One little girl, who had hold of her father's hand, inquired: "Father, why have they put him in the stocks!"

"Because he gets drunk," replied the father.

"When will they put you in the stocks father? for you get drunk, you know," innocently asked the child.

What a powerful lecture from this little child! Well might it produce the resolve, that by God's help, "drink" should be forever abandoned.

How many thousands of poor children are there who would rejoice if "drink" were banished from the land!—Band of Hope Review.

The only fruit which grows in every climate is the strawberry. It is the only fruit which, somewhere on the earth, is picked every day the year round.

Preparing for Sea.

When Henry Ward Beecher reached the age of twelve or thirteen—the usual period of restlessness in boys of strong vital force—he made up his mind to give up dull books for a life of activity and enterprise. The voyage of Captain Cook and the biography of Nelson determined him to the sea as his field of adventure. "He made up his little bundle, walked the wharf, and talked with sailors and captains, hovered irresolute on the verge of voyages, never quite able to grieve his father by a sudden departure."

When his father learned of Henry's adventurous longings, he exhibited the tact which so distinguished him, and which many parents would be the better for possessing, in not opposing his wishes, but seemingly giving way to them at once. He carelessly said one day:

"Let us see, Henry, how old are you?"

"Almost fourteen."

"Bless me! how boys do grow! Why, it's almost time to be thinking what you are going to do. Have you any thought?"

"Yes, I want to go to sea."

"To sea! Of all things! Well, well! After all, why not? Of course you don't want to be a common sailor. You want to get into the navy?"

"Yes, sir, that's what I want."

"But not merely as a common sailor, I suppose?"

"No, sir, I want to be midshipman, and after that commodore."

"I see, said the Doctor, cheerfully. "Well, Henry, in order for that, you know, you must begin a course of mathematics, and study navigation and all that."

"Yes, sir, I am ready."

"Well, then, I'll send you up to Amherst next week, to Mount Pleasant, and then you'll begin your preparatory studies, and if you are well prepared, I presume I can make interest to get you an appointment."

And so he went to Mount Pleasant, in Amherst, Massachusetts, and Dr. Beecher said shrewdly: "I shall have that boy in the ministry yet."

It is almost impossible to think of Beecher as anything but a minister, but one can't help thinking—what a commodore he would have made.

Long Sermons.—A lawyer who consumes three hours in arguing a question of law relating to the ownership of a barrel of apples, is indignant at his minister for exceeding twenty-five minutes in unfolding one of the great principles of morality, on the observance of which the tolerable existence of society depends. The judge who fills two hours with his "opinion" on the right of the counael to challenge a witness, grumbles at his minister because he has prolonged the discussion of fundamental laws of human existence to thirty minutes. The physican who takes ten minutes to prepare the medicine for a headache, is nervously restive if his minister spends only twice as many in attempting to relieve a chronic heartache. The belle who has spent (how long?) in adjusting the bows of her bonnet, is remorseless in her criticisms on the minister who does not finish his meditations on the character of God in fifteen minutes. The fop, who has combed and perfumed and waxed his beard and moustache for an hour, is mortified past endurance if the poor minister is not through his discussion of the immortal life inside of twenty minutes.

The Committee on Ways and Means submitted the following report, which was accepted:

REPORT ON HOUSE BILL No. 65.

The Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred House bill No. 65, an act to fix the salary of each of the two Coroners designated by the new Constitution of 1868, and elected by virtue thereof, the one for the First and Fourth Districts and Algiers, and the other for the Second and Third Districts of the city of New Orleans, parish of Orleans, report thereon unfavorably, for the following reasons:

1. The salary for each of the two Coroners is fixed by the bill at $9000 per annum, while that of the single Coroner, under former laws, was only $9000. It was not the intention of the framers of the Constitution of 1868 to double the expenses of this office by providing for two Coroners instead of one.

2. We regard the payment of Coroner by fees as preferable to payment by salary. The fee is a constant incentive to official zeal and vigilance, whereas a fixed salary produces indifference, apathy, and sometimes indolence. The office of Coroner is next in importance to that of Sheriff, whose place he formerly supplied in case of the removal, disability, or death of Sheriff. Upon the action of the Coroner often depends the discovery and successful prosecution of criminals in cases of homicide, violence, assault, malpractice, abortion, infanticide, etc. From the nature of his duties a Coroner should be versed in medical and surgical knowledge; he ought also to be familiar with the laws of evidence, and a man of intelligence and character. Such an officer should be paid in proportion to his zeal and efficiency. To secure faithful service by competent Coroners we regard the fee system as best.

3. The Coroners ought not in our opinion to be burdened with the labor, care, and responsibility of disbursements, but the necessary expenses of inquests, burials, etc., should be paid on their approval.

4. The matter of Coroners deserves thorough investigation, with the view of reforming and correcting existing usages and laws should it be found necessary.

If such is the pleasure of the House, your committee will prepare and report a bill in accordance with the views above expressed.

A. L. LEE,
Chairman Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. Lott, of Rapides, chairman of the select committee, submitted back the bill referred to the Rapides delegation, and moved that the consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

By Mr. Wren, of Bossier:

An act for the relief of the city of New Orleans.

By Mr. Calhoun, of Rapides:

House bill No. 25, an act for the relief of the office of Attorney General of the State of Louisiana:

Mr. Calhoun submited the following letter from the Attorney General of the State:

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, State of Louisiana, New Orleans, August 4, 1868.

To the Honorable the Members of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, New Orleans:

I beg leave to call your attention to the necessity of an appropriation for the relief of the office of Attorney General.

There are no books, reports, statutes or papers of any kind in the office, as the law entitles it to, and upon inquiry I find my predecessor had none to turn over.

The importance and responsibility of the office I fill requires that I be furnished with books, such as our reports, statutes and the general laws of the United States. I have many serious questions presented to me as the law officer of the State—more serious than any of my predecessors—and must be provided with every facility to discharge my duties as becomes the dignity of this great State. There are no works of this kind in the State Library. When once purchased they will serve the office for many years.

The State has also to provide me with an office. And as there are none in the Institute at all suitable for this office, and in truth none at all, I must ask you to allow me the privilege of leasing one, which I assure you shall be procured at the most reasonable rates, if you accord me this privilege.

There are other expenses which I must incur, such as clerk hire, which will, with stationary, sum up one thousand or eleven hundred dollars.

I have, therefore, made the estimate as follows:

|---|---|
| Office rent per year | $1200 |
| Books | 1200 |
| Stationery, clerk hire | 1100 |
| Total | $3500 |

This is a very moderate estimate, but will be larger than for any succeeding year, as no books will have to be purchased when the office is once provided.

I find a vast amount of labor in my office, and as I desire to make report to you at your next session complete and full, I shall be compelled to employ assistance in the way of clerk hire, and incur other expenses above enumerated.

The accompanying bill, under the most economical calculation, will not be more than sufficient to put the office in [illegible]h condition as necessity and the dignity of the State require.

I submit it to you with the hope that the relief sought will be given.

Respectfully submitted.

SIMEON BELDEN,
Attorney General, State of Louisiana.

RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. Campbell, from the joint committee to investigate the conduct of the late election, on the condition of peace and good will and good order in the State, presented the following report upon the resolution of Mr. E. L. Jewell :

Whereas, Governor Warmoth in his letter to his Excellency, the President of the United States, setting forth the reasons why federal troops should be sent to this State, states among others that "one hundred and fifty men and have been murdered in Louisiana in the last month and a half," and a letter from District Attorney Hudspeth states that "men, women and children, have recently been murdered in the parish of St. Landry by bands of armed men," therefore be it

Resolved, That a committee of three appointed by the President of the Senate, to wait on Governor Warmoth and obtain from him for the information and use of the Senate, the names of the "one hundred and fifty persons murdered," with the time, when, and place where the murders were committed ; and also to procure from him the letter of District Attorney Hudspeth, referred to in the letter addressed to President Johnson.

Amendment by Smith of St. John :

And that they be authorized to ascertain the names of those whose who were butchered by the police force of Mayor Monroe, on the thirtieth of July, 1866 ; and also the names of those who led the band of murderers on that occasion.

Room of Committee on Conduct of Election, and the Condition of Peace and Good Order in the State.

The committee have the honor to report to your honorable body in regard to the enclosed resolutions and amendments submitted for their consideration, that they are not yet in possession of any information in regard to the murders and crimes referred to, but they will proceed at once to the investigation of the facts, and to that end have requested the necessary information from the Governor in regard thereto.

They unanimously recommend the adoption of the resolution and amendment, and the appointment of the committee referred to, with the additional recommendation that such facts as may be elicited by this committee be furnished, with the names of the witnesses, to your committee, to the end that said facts may be set forth in their general report on the present condition of peace and good order in the State.

With regard to the recommendation of the Governor, that the same committee be empowered to investigate the murders and outrages committed throughout the State, your committee are of opinion that such authority is unnecessary, as that duty has already been entrusted to a joint committee of both Houses, who are now employed in such investigation.

Happy Death.

Heaven opened its gates, near this city, about noon, on Wednesday last, and received into its mansions, Oella Chadick Adams, wife of Major E. E. Adams, and niece of Captain W. B. Armstrong. In the bloom and beauty of early womanhood she was taken away. "Her sun went down while yet it was day." In life, timid as a lamb; in death, fearless as a lion. As an infant falls to sleep in the arms of its mother, so she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. To the writer's question, "Have you any fear?" she joyously replied, "All is bright, Doctor; all is bright." Friends weep for the departed, but theirs is not that leaden grief that sometimes comes when dear ones die, but their sorrows are mixed with heavenly joys; their tear-drops reflect the rainbow smiles of heaven. Blessed be Jesus for such a testimony to his grace.

A funeral sermon will be preached in the Ames church, next Sabbath morning.

Four Hundred Freedmen's Schools.

Captain H. H. Pierce, the new Superintendent of Education in this State, under the Freedmen's Bureau, is doing an excellent work, and the late visit of General Howard is yielding much fruit. The report of Captain Pierce for September shows that he has now in his charge and in successful operation, four hundred schools, with two hundred and thirty-four teachers, and nine thousand one hundred and eighty pupils. Fifty-one of these schools were established during the month of September. Much improvement is reported in the parishes near this city, but in those more distant a sad state of ignorance and outrage prevails. The Captain is erecting and repairing buildings, addressing public meetings of colored people on the subject of education and wisely co-operating with other bodies and school boards, in the interest of his work. We congratulate the Bureau and all lovers of education upon a good work well done.

Encouraging.

One of our subscribers at Darian Depot, Connecticut, forwards us his subscription to the ADVOCATE for the years 1868, 1869 and 1870.

That looks like standing by us and our work.

He adds a few lines in regard to political prospects, saying: "Connecticut will be on the side of 'Freedom and order' in November. If there was any doubt before, the late town meetings have shown the enemy greatly demoralized."

Mrs. General Canby.

This excellent and unselfish Christian lady writes us that "Mordecai," our Washington correspondent, was in error in stating that she originated the "Prison Visiting Committee." She informs us that the movement originated with the late Mrs. General Eaton, "who has passed to her mansions of rest."

Ames Methodist Episcopal Church.

There will be preaching every Sabbath at 11 A. M., in Dr. Newman's church, corner of St. Charles and Calliope streets, and social meetings for conference and prayer every Sunday and Thursday evening from eight to nine o'clock in the lecture room. You are invited.

Working for Christ.

"Go work in my Vineyard," says the Master to every one. And realizing that he is our Creator, our provider and protector; that his love to us is of the strongest, purest, parental nature, how is it possible for us to imagine that any could falter a moment in obeying.

And yet we are aware that by far the greater number do not fly in delight to obey their loving Father's voice. Like wayward, stubborn children, they are ever inventing excuses to quiet their consciences while in disobedience.

Reader, what is your excuse for your sloth? Why, poor, weak, ease-loving soul, you say your efforts would do no good; you could accomplish nothing. Ah, poor soul! You've got the spiritual dyspepsia. You have been living too much of a sedentary life, spiritually, and no wonder you feel weak and "out of sorts."

Suppose that a man sits down in his study, or at his office desk, giving up all vigorous exercise, yet at the same time continues his former allowance of rich, hearty food, the consequence is that all the horrors of dyspepsia soon come upon him. He loses to a great extent his relish for food, and his power to digest it.

What should he do? You are quick to reply that he should get out of his confinement and take more physical exercise, saw wood, hoe corn, or walk several miles a day, and fill his lungs with God's pure air; any thing to start his feeble circulation, and develop his drooping frame. He will have but little desire for this exercise at first, nay he may feel it an unpleasant task. But persisting therein, he will soon find extreme delight and be conscious of increasing health and strength from day to day.

Now this is about your case in spiritual matters. You sought to take your full of God's rich blessings, but gave up your activity and settled down in idleness, and to-day you are a spiritual dyspeptic. You have lost nearly all relish for things spiritual. And farther than this, your disease is becoming more and more confirmed each day. Take your own advice quickly, and out to work some where in the vineyard of your Master. Doubtless you will not relish it at first, but rather feel a shrinking therefrom. Yet that is no proof that you are not to receive benefit, nor that you are not capable of being developed into a strong, vigorous and useful man. Arise and force yourself to work, and soon, in the light of your Master's countenance, you will find your lankness and leanness giving place to "fullness of joy," your "blues" blown far away by the first breeze from the spirit land, awakened by your breath of believing prayer; your whole spiritual man invigorated, and no longer then will

"Duty seem a load,
And worship prove a task."

Can't accomplish anything? Why, if you were filled with devoted zeal, there is scarcely anything that you might not accomplish. Look at the great systems of error and superstition that have arisen and spread over great portions of the earth. How was it accomplished? Not assuredly by the truth that inheres in them, but by the zeal of their advocates. Then if error and superstition can be advanced by the zeal of their advocates, how much more may that system of religion be advanced, whose foundation is truth, especially when this zeal is backed by holy, devoted lives on the part of its advocates.

But here you are ready with another excuse for your sloth. That you are assured that truth and righteousness will in the end prevail. The Bible prophecies it, and God will bring it about in his own good time, that your puny efforts can not hasten prophecy. And thus from the very confidence you have in the final establisment of Christianity over the whole earth, you slacken your efforts, thus showing that the advocates of truth often manifest far less zeal than the advocates of error.

Remember that there is no allowance in the word of God for such sloth.

No doubt truth will in the end prevail. But the day of its triumph over error is to be hastened on by earnest Christian souls. Men have been made by God the instruments of converting the nations to himself. Men can hasten the fulfillment of prophecy in this regard. And every individual should feel that on his or her efforts hang victory. As from the flagship of Lord Nelson on the day of battle, all who looked read on its streaming banner, "England expects every man to do his duty to-day." so must we believe that Christ expects every one of his followers to do his duty to-day. Not to-morrow. Not next week. Not in the sunshine and peace of next year, but to-day, while the battle rages and the enemies of God are bold and defiant. "Work while it is called to-day," saith Jesus. There is no glory in being a bold soldier in peace. There is no great fidelity manifested in standing by your friend in sunshine and prosperity. But stand courageously to your place in the hour of battle, if you would prove your valor as a soldier. If you would prove your devotion to your friend, stand by him in the dark hour of adversity, when others have forsaken.

You have been waiting for favorable circumstances. Wait no longer. Go to work and make circumstances.

Do the best you can and your labor shall not be in vain. "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless return again bringing his sheaves with him."

Do you really love your Master, and would you see him honored by all? If your tongue says yes, your actions contradict it. You do not seek his preferment. How does the politician manifest his love for, and his desire to bring honor to his friend? By doing all in his power to gain him friends and votes. He does not say that his words and influence will accomplish nothing. If he has not the qualifications for addressing the multitude, then he, in private conversation, seeks to prevail on all he meets to give his friend their support. Now you have not half the zeal of the politician, in seeking to gain followers and supporters to your friend—the Savior. For shame should you hang your head, that such is the fact.

Up and be doing, and make amends for the past. Be zealous in the future in discharging every duty. Speak and work for God as he gives you opportunity. Not in the prayer and conference room merely, in exhorting the brethren, very little will do there. Speak all abroad to strangers of the Lord. But approach them not with a melancholy countenance, with a whine and whang, but with all the naturalness that you would address them on other important subjects. Give them not up with the first attempt. Make them the burden of your prayer. Use all your tact in properly approaching them, and you will seldom meet with repulse. But should you accomplish little, Jesus will give you your full reward for your obedience, just the same as if much was accomplished.

With all the zeal of the politician you certainly can win one follower for Jesus in a year. If every church member does it, the church is doubled in numbers each year. How quickly, at that rate, would the world be brought to Christ.

But farther, it is an imperative command of Christ that you go work in his vineyard. Neglect it and you lose your soul. Obey and you shall be saved, for "they that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars, forever and ever," and those that they win to Christ shall be as "stars in the crown of their rejoicing."

Why Is the State Government Weak?

Colonel Nixon, in the Crescent of the twentieth instant, writes an article on the recent assassinations in St. Mary parish and elsewhere, and adduces the same in proof that our State government is a failure. The following is the gist of his sayings:

At this moment it is plain that in this and in most of the other reconstructed States the so-called civil governments are destitute of intrinsic power to maintain themselves and to administer their laws.

True, lawlessness reigns. Murder holds high carnival in the country parishes. Negroes are slain like sheep; loyal white men are murdered in the bosom of their families; sheriffs and judges are shot like dogs by masked and armed bands; parish and State officers are unable to discharge their official duties; editors are whipped and their presses destroyed; and ministers of the Gospel are hung and their churches burned.

For the argument, we concede this and even more to be too true; and we admit that the present State Government is too weak to protect our loyal citizens in their lives and property. But what are the causes of this weakness? Upon whom rests the responsibility of this lawlessness? Is weakness proof of evil per se and of wrong doing? Let us consider for a moment these graye questions. The constitutionality of the governments of the reconstructed States is a recognized fact, by Congress, by the United States Supreme Court, and by the American people. Nor is it an immaterial point, that a majority of the qualified voters in Louisiana have accepted and approved her new Government. It is equally true that our State Constitution compares favorably with the Constitutions of the most powerful State in the Republic. It is a fact not to be denied, that the present State and parish officers were duly elected by a majority of the legal voters of Louisiana, and that since their inauguration they have discharged their duty with integrity and courage. And it is also a tremendous fact, that the very men who now denounce the State government unconstitutional and a failure, did run for office under said Constitution; were willing to accept contracts for printing and otherwise, and to "make an honest dollar." They and their friends have beleaguered and belabored our General Assembly to pass bills, appropriating millions of dollars.

Two general causes have operated and do still operate to weaken the executive power of the State. The moral influence of the fifty thousand Democrats in the State is deliberately and persistently thrown against the administration of Louisiana, and among them are persons of the first intelligence wealth and social standing in the State but who are under the bond of a fearful crime against the nation's life.

rom the pulpit down to the vilest coffeehouse; from the ablest journalis, down to the penny-a-liner; from the judge on the bench down through all the legal profession; from the Solons to the shyster of the Parish Prison; from the leading merchants down to the Jew peddler; all who were identified with the late rebellion and sympathized therewith, cease not to revile those in power, and openly denounce them as usurpers, while the new government numbers among its friends ministers, journalists, jurists and merchants, of whom any State or party might well be proud. Yet the supporters of the present administration are chiefly the laboring classes, who for three generations have been oppressed and cowed by an arrogant more powerful race. As eight to five the latter outnumber the former, but as five to eight, the former are more powerful than the latter. In New Orleans, where the Republicans can boast of intelligence, wealth and social potion, the laws are more readily enforced, but in the country parishes, where the freedmen are the bulk of the supporters of the administration, the laws are contemned and the officers of the law resisted. We hold, therefore, that the responsibility of this weakness, of the present state of lawlessness in Louisiana, and of the assassinations therein committed, lies at the door of the Democrats of the State, and God and humanity will so hold them responsible. Similar disorders under similar circumstances could prevail in New York or Connecticut, or in any other State in the Union.

As the ally of those citizens who are thus banded against our new Government, is the President of the United States. He has sent military officers to command our District who threw their tremendous influence against the State; he has appointed men to our Customhouse, who are loud, and vile, and eloquent in denouncing Governor Warmoth and the other gentlemen elected as his official associates; he has declined to permit Governor Warmoth to organize such a militia force as would be adequate to maintain the peace, while he has so far denuded the State of United State troops, that the loyal and peaceable citizens of Louisiana can hope for no protection from those they are taxed to support. What government would not be weak with such tremendous odds against it? We confess that our wonder is not that the Government is weak, but that it exists. Its existence is proof of its "intrinsic power to maintain itself," and that it rests upon some great, fundamental, unconquerable principle of justice and goodness. Therefore, at the door of President Johnson we lay the murdered forms of Pope and Chase, and Brooks, and Randolph, while we pile up before his door the skulls and bones of four hundred Union men murdered in the fair State of Louisiana.

It must be patent to every candid reader of history, that weakness is not proof of evil per se nor of wrong doing. Were our revolutionary fathers wrong doers and their cause evil per se because for eight years they could not conquer the English? Were the loyal men of this country wrong doers and their cause intrinsically bad because they were too weak to subdue the late rebellion until the fifth year? Was Christianity false because its founder was crucified and his followers slain? Is it not a law of nature and providence that virtue in its primary struggles with vice is worsted, but though crushed to earth, rises again to conquer at last? Let the Democratic citizens of Louisiana join with their Republican fellow-citizens and resolve that lawlessness shall be suppressed. Let President Johnson proclaim that the public peace shall be maintained. Let the Cresecent and Times throw their influence on the side of order, and let the law-abiding citizens of all parties combine to keep the laws, and we shall be only too glad to join hands with citizens without regard to party, to preserve the lives and property of the people of Louisiana.

A New Horror.

Following close upon the Opelousas and the Shreveport massacres of white and colored Republicans, comes now the cold blooded murder in Franklin, St. Mary parish, of our esteemed and gallant young friend, Colonel Pope, Sheriff of the parish, and of Mr. Valentine Chase, recently elected the Parish Judge. The readers of the Democratic organ of St. Mary, the Planters' Banner, edited by Daniel Dennet, had been prepared by incendiary editorials for the event, which appears to have been most deliberately planned. In no other parish of this State has the party of law and order presented a more calm, intelligent and respectable appearance. In material and in manner it was a model; no where else had the Democracy, perhaps we should say the pro-slavery Democracy, a better opportunity of proving the sincerity of their boasts of being the negro's best friend, their cordial acceptance of the situation, and their willingness to enter upon a fair and peaceful contest for political supremacy. This recourse to the bowie knife and revolver is a humiliating admission of weakness, or worse, a confession of hypocrisy. It is, however, something more, a determination by the old party leaders and hackneyed politicians of this and other parishes to return to their ante bellum tactics for the purpose of securing and retaining office in the face of any and every opposition. All over the State there is a class of men who claim a proscriptive right to control their parishes and enjoy all the emoluments of office therein. They are a set of born aristocrats who held and desire still to hold Louisiana as a feudal possession, to perpetuate an odious oligarchy, excluding from interference in governmental affairs all but themselves, their families and their parasites—the vile sycophants, like editor Dennett, who fawn upon them and lick up their spittle, kissing the hand that smites them.

These born politicians and hereditary office holders have very unwillingly seen their power wane; but the sublime generosity of the government they labored to destroy, the favor of a traitor President, and the inaction of military commanders, have combined to warm into life their dead hopes, and now the lives of honored and patriotic citizens, the material prosperity of the State and the fair fame of our people, must be sacrificed for their personal profit and greedy lust of power. Party fealty with these men is but a question of name and expediency. They have been Democrat, Whig, Know-Nothing, Unionist, Secession, champions of slavery or freedom, all in turn. The stripes and stars and the stars and bars are alike; only let office, power, emolument, be secured to them, and then only they are satisfied. Talk about the intimidation of the negroes—much more are the whites intimidated. Remove the pressure, and the testimony of all St. Mary Parish, at least, will be in favor of free ballot, education, opportunity, irrespective of race, color or previous condition. There is trembling and a sense of oppression in mansions as well as cabins. Mechanics, merchants, and farmers, as well as laborers, had begun to hope for a better day, for utter deliverance from their oppressors' yoke, and these murderous shots and blows not only pierce and prostrate Pope and Chase, but the people of St. Mary parish. It is not yet time to give names, but when the day comes, wo! wo! not to their poor tools, but to the real murderers! Then will they in turn be the fugitives, if they are allowed to escape the penalty of their terrible crimes. Meanwhile, let them proceed in their vain attempts to stamp out the fires of freedom, kindled by the immortal Lincoln. Let them strive to quench it in the blood of their many victims; the end is not far off. The Lord of hosts is evidently in the contest, and the tokens seem to indicate that like Pharaoh of old, his enemies are rushing to their own destruction. The circumstances of the Franklin murders, as related to us by the bereaved widow of Colonel Pope and other fugitives from St. Mary, mark this as perhaps the most atrocious of the recent political assassinations.

The Sheriff occupied rooms in the Planters' Hotel, opposite the Court House, in the rear range of apartments, and on the corner. One side of the square occupied by the hotel opened upon the alleyway. Our friend was sitting on the gallery overlooking the court yard; at his side was Judge Chase, quietly conversing. The assassins entered stealthily from the alley, coming in under the gallery, to the broad stairway, rushed up the stairs and opened fire upon both gentlemen. Several shots entered the side of Colonel Pope's face, who at once fell and crawled upon his hands and knees into the room. The Judge, not being hit fatally, struggled to get away from his murderers, rushed down the steps, and in the yard had another struggle with the fiends, who shot and stabbed him repeatedly. He got away again, out of the yard and around to the rear of the hotel, facing upon the bayou; here the fatal shot was fired, the ball entering the back of his head, where he fell and was left until morning. No "guard was placed over the body," as stated by the papers, and every one knew where it was. He did not die immediately, but was heard groaning most of the night, though no one dared go to his assistance. When the firing took place, Mrs. Pope was at the bedside of the landlord's wife, Mrs. O'Neil. She at once ran across the yard and up the steps, gaining the gallery, while the assassins were struggling there with Judge Chase. Her husband was then dying and could give her no sign of recognition. Most of the night she paced the gallery in view of his mangled body; friends, for whom she sent, feared to respond, or else were not permitted to receive her message. With difficulty could the landlord, otherwise a kind hearted man, be persuaded to enter her room and stretch out the body before it stiffened in death. Being refused coffin and hearse, she bravely kept vigil beside the beloved remains until Monday morning—the deed having been committed on Saturday, about dark. What a Sabbath to that crushed widow, alone with her dead husband and her living infant! Surely, God's sweet angels hovered near, to aid her. The ladies of Franklin did not visit their poor sister, but sent her word that they would gladly do so were it not for the opprobrium it would provoke on account of her husband's poiltics. One precious woman called, and fearless of the danger incurred, did all in her power for the bereaved it was Mrs. Parks, teacher of the colored school in our church. All; honor to her and the womanly nature she adorns. At the coroner's inquest, Mrs. Pope charged the death of her husband upon editor Dennett. It is said that on Friday Dennett, Hafleigh, Tucker and others, left town, returning on Sunday, that the roads and bayou were picketed to "catch the carpet baggers," and that the editors of the Republican paper, the Register, had escaped, also Judge Fisk, the Registrars and others, who had been marked as victims.

As in the case of Mr. Bentley, at Opelousas, and in every other case on record, the outraged parties used all their influence to prevent any retaliation, hoping for justice and future protection from the law and dreading an appeal to violence. Mrs. Pope and the friends of both of the deceased were besought by the citizens to quiet the people whose leaders had been so brutally murdered; and it was done. Now as magnanimity is unknown to assassins, the consideration finally forces itself upon our mind, is this right? Is not self preservation a sacred duty, and as one class of "citizens," as the Democratic press always term rioters, never speak of law or regard it, should not other citizens, in the absence of legal protection, defend themselves?

Do They Mean War?

Many at the South threatened that if their armies were broken up and defeated, that they would continue to keep up a guerrilla warfare throughout the country.

Is the recent slaughter of twenty-eight colored persons, in their quarters, on one plantation alone above Shreveport, and the hanging, shooting and burning of others, on neighboring plantations; is the cold-blooded murder of Colonel Pope and Judge Chase at Franklin, by a gang of villains, and the many assassinations and wholesale massacres throughout the country, the news of which reach us almost daily, are these the fulfillment of that threat? Do they mean to exterminate by detail all those who differ from them in politics? Verily it looks like this.

The land is drenched in the blood of Republicans, white and black, and yet where is there a single Democratic (late rebel) paper that deplores the murders or condemns the murderers? Where is there even a religious journal of the Southern churches, that speaks boldly out against these things, telling their people of a more excellent way, and warning them of the dire results of their present course? The pulpit and the press are alike silent, while constantly there is heard, the baying of hounds in the pursuit; the crack of the torturing whip, the crackling fires at the stake, the tightening halter, the whistling bullet, all bringing death to the sympathizers of the government.

Does not this mean war? Exterminating war? But why, as the Southern papers boast so much of their chivalry, do they not manifest it by declaring their purpose, and giving their foes some chance?

Many noble men there may be among them, but from the many deeds of darkness perpetrated, and the manner in which it is done, would it not seem that they are chivalrous like the hyena, or the prowling lynx or wolf, who, under cover of the night, or in great force, stealthily draws near and destroys the herdsman's flock? Chivalrous like the savage who waylays his victim and shoots him down in cold blood, or pierces his heart with the assassin's knife.

Chivalrous! Shades of departed heroes, pity and forgive them for traducing so much the fair word, which designated thy noble deeds, as to apply it for a moment to such cowardly, bloodthirsty monsters as themselves.

Yes, if war is meant, declare it like men. Be not so deceived as to suppose that the colored people and the white Unionists are to stand quietly by and see portion after portion of their ranks assailed, and scores murdered in cold blood. They have borne much and long. They are the party of peace, and would suffer many indignities to prove by their acts as well as their words, their principles. But do not suppose they are cowards because they bear these things. Do not suppose that they will forever continue, when "smitten on the one cheek to turn the other to the smiter." Do not suppose that you can always prevail upon the injured to quiet the multitude of their friends, as in the case at Franklin. There, when the citizens had connived at the murder of Colonel Pope, the Sheriff, and his friend, Judge Chase; after ordering the undertaker not to give Mrs. Pope a coffin for the body of her deceased husband, and ordering also the keeper of the livery stable not to let her have a conveyance to take the body to the cars, they then come to the widow and beg her to speak to the colored people lest there be an uprising. Poor woman! Her husband shot down by a gang of ruffians at his home in her presence, leaving her with her little child to mourn his untimely end; with her heart wrung with agony, and all her feelings outraged by the utter injustice of the act, how could she say to her hundreds of colored friends, "Be calm, avenge not his death!" But she did it. She desired not that others should mourn because she mourned. The innocent like herself might be among the number. She, therefore, spoke words to quiet them ere she departed with the body of him she loved, to lay it beneath the springing grass and waving prairie flowers of Illinois, his former State. Men of the South, you who fought against your country and tried to destroy it, if you mean war again, declare it, not play the part of assassins and butchers.

We are for peace. Dissension and strife we greatly deplore. We do not uphold all the Republican party has done in this State, nor do scores of others who act with the great National Republican party. A few months' patient waiting will remedy all these things, the assassin's knife and the murderer's bullet, never. Yes, we are for peace, that prosperity may again come to the suffering South. The watch-word of our party is the saying of our leader, "Let us have peace." But if you want war you are pursuing the right course to bring it about. Go on with your assassinations, your butchery and slaughter, but remember that all the places where your victim's blood has been poured out like water, are marked. And when the "boys in blue" come sweeping down from the broad prairies of Illinois, St. Mary parish, which sowed to the wind in murdering in cold blood, their noble chieftain, SHALL REAP THE WHIRLWIND MINGLED WITH FIRE.

Wishing to do justice to all we would say that since the above was set up we have noticed that the Crescent has come out condemning strongly the assassination of Colonel Pope.

The Spirit of Assassination.

Charles Sumner evoked a howl of rage from all Dixie when he characterized slavery as in its essence and in its effects upon the tone and character of the people South, barbarian.

Southern people and speakers denounced this accusation as false. By way of proof, they threatened Messrs. Beecher, Seward, Hale, and others of like opinions, with hanging, tarring and so on, if they should dare to profane Southern soil with their presence. No one who differed with them was to be tolerated. It is a little suggestive, in the light of the present, to recollect some of their characterizations of the most eminent and honored men of our day. Garrison was a lunatic, Beecher was a hypocrite, Seward was a villain, Lincoln was a gorilla, Sumner was a raving fool. Until the war, however, it was not believed by the people of the North generally that these epithets expressed the actual state of the Southern intellect, heart and conscience.

The firing on Sumter, Beauregard's "black flag" letter, the pretty convivialities over Yankee skulls, the thousand tender little mementoes carved from the bones of Yankee corpses by gallant Confederates, for the loved ones at home. Fort Pillow, Andersonville, all fittingly crowned by the horrible assassination of the beloved Lincoln, convinced those of the civilized world who had doubted before, that a very deep tincture of barbarism had been infused into the minds and morals of the Southern people by their pet barbarity.

It had been supposed by superficial thinkers that with the close of the war and the fall of slavery, this barbarism had disappeared. But the South did not leave them to rest long under this delusion.

Upon a word of comfort from Johnson, New Orleans, Memphis, Texas, and thousands of petty massacres and isolated murders, whippings and burnings, all over the South, gave witness to its life and power.

The attitude of the business or more reputable kind of people toward these outrages and their perpetrators, was to thoughtful minds the most convincing proof of the barbaric state of the public mind and morals. The leading papers of the South met the plain statements of these crimes either with indignant denial or with labored apology for the criminals and abuse of their victims.

The most fortunate thing for the South and the country at large, was that there stood in New Orleans and witnessed the test case, as it were, of the lengths to which this barbarism could carry American white men, a little, sturdy soldier, who described it in plain, blunt, Saxon words, without exaggeration or disguise, and the country believed him. Recently, the report of the joint committee of the General Assembly, showing as the results of a very limited investigation, nearly four hundred cases of murder and outrages within the last year, and the murders at Opelousas, Shreveport and at Franklin, the murder of the Sheriff and Parish Judge on one day last week, will convince the most charitable that not only was slavery the sum of all barbarity, but that its barbarizing influence upon the whites was deeper and more ineradicable than was ever dreamed of.

The only cure for this is light. Let the plain facts be heralded. Let these people see themselves as others see them. Let them feel the just scorn and indignation of all Christian and some heathen nations. Let their commerce and trade and agriculture feel the blighting effects of the reputation which they are earning, until the honest white men of the State take the matter in hand, by enforcing the laws and hanging these lawless characters, whose murderous propensities can not be restrained.

We say to the Times, Crescent and Picayune, that they could do more for our State by a few short lines denouncing these crimes and their authors as they deserve, than by columns of rhetoric on Radical misrule or the Presidential election.

Our First Martyr.

A METHODIST PREACHER HUNG.

Rev. Anthony Bewley has a companion in martyrdom. In the "Lone Star" State, another Methodist preacher has been hung. Texas claims the proto-martyr of our Church since its reorganization in the Southwest. In the winter of 1865, an intelligent, courageous, powerfully built colored man, twenty-five years old, entered the Thomson Biblical Institute, to prepare for the Christian ministry. He was Edwin Brooks. A machinist by trade, he commanded four dollars per day; but he left all to follow Christ. A faithful student, he advanced rapidly in his studies, and after a year's tuition, joined the Texas Conference, and was sent by Bishop Simpson to Millican, Texas, and at the succeeding Conference was reappointed by Bishop Ames. He soon became a leading man among his people, who looked up to him for religious advice and political counsel. In August last a white man entered the cabin of a freedman and threatened his life; but the man fled to the woods—the old place of refuge. From this incident occurred what was called the "Millican riot," which resulted so fatally to the blacks. In the troubles that followed, Rev. Edwin Brooks was the recognized leader of his brethren. After the excitement had subsided, Brooks was ordered to Austin, to report to General Reynolds. On his way he found himself pursued by a band of armed men, from whom he fled and took refuge in the "Brazos river bottoms." But the blood-houds were soon upon his path and uncovered his retreat to his bloody pursuers. Having secured their victim, they demanded that he should disclose the object of his mission to Austin, and that he should recant his Republican principles. Refusing to do either, they began to torture him in the most cruel manner. They stripped the flesh from his body, but he refused to recant; they broke his legs, but he declined to foreswear his honor and his faith; they then hung him by the neck till he died a martyr for his Church and country. After the horrid murder, the colored people were permitted to take the body of their pastor down and give it a decent burial. Thus a former student and fellow laborer, ended a life in which he had suffered as a slave, fought as a Union soldier, and which he crowned with martyrdom.

Democratic Christian Advocate

The Democratic Christian Advocate, of this city, edited by Rev. Dr. Keener, has been so excessively jubilant over the recent St. Louis demonstration and the gorgeous club displays of its party as to excite much comment by the Northern press.

The North Western Advocate, of Chicago, in its issue of October 7, wonders how these Church South papers can condemn politics in journals of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and at the same time fill columns with the most intensely partisan matter. Down here at "the front," we understand this thing better. These political bushwhackers carry no flag, and profess to be neutral or non combatant, yet fail not to improve every opportunity of glorifying Democracy and decrying Republicanism. It would be expecting too much of weak human nature, to ask of these brethren silence on the great issues of the day; and as they are the men who rose in arms against the nation, that they should not desire the success and labor manfully in behalf of their lost cause, but it is sad to reflect that these professedly Christian men and denominational journalists, have been so degraded by the corrupt ethics of slavery, and are so bent on the recovery of political power as systematically and constantly to disregard truth. Priests and people alike seem pleased to act the hypocrit's part, and it is upon this fact more than even the material evidences around us, that we predicate our judgment that the Almighty has written ichabod upon the walls of the Methodist Church South.

That Fifty Thousand Dollar Bribe.

Before Governor Warmoth had vetoed the bill authorizing the city to issue $5,000,000 of bonds, which being sold at eighty cents, would give some body $1,000,000, a person placed on the desk of the Governor's private secretary a note for $50,000. The note was refused by Mr. Remick, but the party presenting it retired, leaving it on the desk; and it now can be seen as a witness of the corruption of our times, and also as evidence of the incorruption of the Governor and his Secretary.

Governor Warmoth very properly vetoed the bill, for which he deserves the thanks of this community. But what shall we say of the House that passed the bill over the veto? What bribes were received? And who received them? Gentlemen, the Republican tax payers of this city are on your track, and we warn you that you are known and that political retribution awaits you. Such misdeeds reflect upon the character of all Republicans, because of party identity, and if necessary we will prepare a "Roll of infamy" for you. The Senate did better and sustained the Governor's veto.

Notices of Periodicals.

PETER'S MONTHLY GLEE HIVE.—The Glee Hive is printed on fine, heavy paper, and each number contains fourteen pages of music, about the size of ordinary sheet music, consisting of sacred and secular glees, trios, quartetts, opera choruses, etc., arranged principally for mixed voices, with occasional pieces for male and female voices, to which will be added an accompaniment for the piano ad lib. The music is arranged especially for this work, under the able direction of Mr. William Dressler. The pieces in the October number are very fine. This, we think, is the cheapest manner in which first class music is furnished the public, as the price is but $3 00 per year. Single copies 30 cents.

Address J. L. Peters, music publisher, Post Office box 5429, New York.

PETER'S PARLOR COMPANION—for the flute, violin and piano. Each number contains sixteen pages of instrumental music. The October number contains Barbe Bleue Quadrilles. This is the same price as the Glee Hive.

[For the New Orleans Advocate.]

Take Notice!

The ministers in charge of circuits and stations throughout the Jackson District, Mississippi Conference, are requested to take up a Missionary collection on the first Sunday in December. Do not fail, Brethren, for notwithstanding all that is being done by our Northern friends, the people in the South are still starving for the Gospel. Organize Missionary Societies in your Sunday schools.

The charge raising the largest of Missionary money will be considered the banner charge of the Conference.

Literary Spleen.

The following book notice is from Brother Keener's paper of the third instant. It is so sad when an editor carries his political animosities into literature. Mr. Charles Nordhoff is a member of our church and a consistent Republican; it is that stirred the bad blood in Brother Keener and provoked this partisan diatribe. But we read Mr. Nordhoff's book with a keen relish, especially as a literary recreation, and find in it gems of thought and gems of diction:

CAPE COD AND ALL ALONG SHORE STORIES, by Charles Nordhoff. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1868; 12mo., pp. 235.

One of the worst attempts at story-telling we have met with. The style is vulgar and blustering. The author affects to be humorous, and presents the public—to use one of his own elegancies—"a small basket of stale eggs"—in fact, a collection of several poor pieces from Harper's Magazine. For sale by G. W. Ellis, No. 7 Old Levee street, New Orleans.

A PRAYER FOR ALL WIVES.—Lord bless and preserve my husband; let his life be long and blessed, comfortable and holy; and let me also become a great blessing and comfort unto him, a sharer in all his joys, a refreshment in all his sorrows, a meet helper for him in all the accidents and changes of the world: and make me admirable forever in his eyes, and very dear to him. Unite his heart to me, in the dearest union of love and holiness, and mine to him in all the sweetness of charity and compliance. Keep me from all ungentleness and unreasonableness and unseasonableness of passion and humor, and make me humble and obedient, charitable and loving, patient and contented, useful and observant, that we may delight in each other according to Thy blessed word and ordnance, and both of us may rejoice in thee, having our portion in the love and service of God forever.

One of the most touchingly simple wills was left by the German pastor Holzapfel, of Reifnitz. It consists of this line only: "My soul to God, my body to earth, my money to our deaf and dumb hospital."

The postage on the ADVOCATE is twenty cents a year, or five cents a quarter, payable in advance.

Our Congressional Nominees.

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.
Hon. J. H. Sypher.

This gentleman has been renominated in the First Congressional District of this State and will, no doubt, be elected by an increased majority. The people of this district have shown their wisdom in renominating this bold and fearless young advocate of liberty and equal rights. He is a young man of high character, indomitable energy and fair abilities; and, if elected, he will be one of the useful men of the forty-first Congress.

Gen Sypher was born in Pennsylvania, received a collegiate education and read law, which he intended to practice as his profession; but when the war broke out, he, like hundreds of the better young men of the land who hated the oppression of the South, enlisted as a private soldier in the ranks of the Union army. He served gallantly during the entire war, rising rapidly from the ranks through all the grades of the army to the ranks of Brigadier General. At the close of the war he located in this State, and with his brother, invested about seventy thousand dollars in the cotton planting enterprise. It will be observed that he did not come to Louisiana with his carpet-bag empty. The people of Rapides parish will remember many acts of disinterested kindness shown them by the "Sypher Brothers." While the General lived on his plantation he took no part in politics, although he frequently advised his neighbors to accept the situation in good faith and invite capital from the North and Europe to recuperate the great interests of his adopted State and develop her immense resources. When Congress adopted the scheme of reconstruction, he considered it his duty as well as the duty of every law-abiding citizen to aid in restoring the States to the Union.

The Republicans chose General Sypher to represent them in the fortieth Congress, and they were not mistaken in their choice as his work will show. He was admitted only eight days before the adjournment, and in that time he presented measures which looked to the rebuilding of the levees of the Mississippi by national aid, establishing a money order postal system between the United States and France. Also bills providing for the enforcement of the third section of the fourteenth article of the constitutional amendment, and for the payment of claims of loyal citizens of our State. By this record of eight days, General Sypher has shown himself both wise and capable; and with a fair chance we predict that he will render service to the State of his adoption which will gain him the praise of all fair minded men of all parties. Republicans of the First District, send him back—you cannot find a better man.

SECOND CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.
General L. A. Sheldon.

This gentleman is a native of the State of New York, but his parents emigrated to Ohio in his childhood.

The rugged and energetic life of the Western people has had its effect in forming the habits and ideas of General Sheldon. In early life he struck out alone with a view of making a fortune for himself, and by his own individual efforts. By laboring on a farm and by school teaching, he obtained the means of education. He chose the legal profession for a pursuit, and prosecuted his studies both in Ohio and New York—and was admitted to the bar in the autumn of 1853. He rose rapidly in the profession, and on the breaking out of the rebellion he was in full tide of a profitable and permanent practice.

In 1854 General Sheldon identified himself earnestly and actively with the Republican party, and did much in the locality where he resided to bring victory to its banner. Northern Ohio is celebrated for the straightforward and sturdy sentiments of the people, particularly upon the questions of slavery and National Union; and General Sheldon, in early manhood, became deeply imbued with the same feelings, and in every political campaign previous to 1861, exerted himself upon the stump, and otherwise, with great pertinacity and vigor in behalf of the Republican party. He was a member of the Convention which nominated Fremont for the Presidency in 1856, and held several civil offices in the gift of the party. He was in the full confidence of the prominent Republicans of Ohio and of other States.

On the breaking out of the rebellion, he at once abandoned his business and declined accepting civil office under the administration of Abraham Lincoln, for the purpose of giving his entire time and efforts to the cause of the country. When the call for three years' troops was made, he entered the army as a captain, and was promoted from time to time to all the grades up to, and including that of Brigadier General. He belonged to the army in the field during the whole war, and participated with distinction in many of the hardest battles fought in the West by the armies of the Cumberland and the Tennessee. He served under Grant and Sherman in all their campaigns against Vicksburg. When that stronghold fell he came to the Department of the Gulf with the Thirteenth Corps.

At the close of the war he settled in New Orleans, in the practice of his profession. By his industry, integrity and talents, he has won an honorable position at the bar, and the confidence of the business community. His character as a man is unexceptionable. He possesses fine culture, and is an excellent and effective speaker at the bar and upon the stump. He has none of the demagogue in his composition, and is a man of decided and well-considered convictions, and possesses both the moral and physical courage to advocate them under all circumstances.

Upon the question of manhood rights, his opinions ante-date the war, were formed in his early manhood, and have been consistently adhered to ever since. His extensive acquaintance with the leading soldiers and statesmen of the North and West will at once give him a powerful influence in promoting the interests of the people of the Southwest. His election to Congress is certain, and we predict for him a career of usefulness and distinction.—Campaign Republican.

John Quincy Adams.

We ask the Democratic papers to publish the remarkable letter of this gentleman to the South Carolinians. It would be well also to have it read in the circles of the white Camelia.

This young man is a leading Democrat. He may be the next President to Grant. With Grant on one side and Adams on the other—your side—what aid and comfort can you desire for your K. W. C. oaths, gimlet knives and Manhattan revolvers.

A maneuver, or a coup d'etat, or a Ku-Klux rising, would hardly be the fair thing to greet his ears with, as he steps ashore at Charleston bay, on this his first tour to console and dine with the South Carolina Democracy:

MR. ADAM'S REPLY.

Messrs. Wade Hampton, James Daniel Pope, F. W. McMaster, John P. Thomas and W. B. Stanley.

GENTLEMEN—Your letter of September 22, reached me on the twenty-sixth, and I found it to require such careful consideration that I have withheld my answer until now. My first impulse was to accept you invitation at once, and hasten to respond to your appeal upon the instant; but a moment's reflection and a review of your letter restrained me. I am as anxious as you can be to see kindly relations and fraternal feelings replace the sore and angry suspicion which prevails upon both sides of our land, nor would any labor daunt me in such a cause; but I am more powerless than you are to promote such a result. You greatly exaggerate any influence of mine, misled, doubtless, by the accident of an historic name, I represent nothing in Massachusetts but a comparatively small and very unpopular minority, and am regarded as hardly less objectionable, though far more insignificant, than yourselves by the majority. Nothing that I could do or say, if I visited you, would be likely to receive a fair or candid construction. My action would be attributed to silly or unworthy motives, and yours to the inveterate animosity which is still believed to animate the South. In spite of any protests of ours it will be insisted that we had some "disloyal" intent in our meeting. I do not urge these apprehensions as reasons for an absolute refusal, for I should try to face my share of the obloquy with such fortitude as I could master, if I saw a fair chance of aiding, be it ever so little, a better understanding between the two sections. But as you seem to anticipate an important effect on the North from the reception which you might offer to me, I think it right to disabuse you of the error. Nor do I think that I can say those things to your people which would be delightful to them to hear, or pleasant for me to speak. Your fate has been for the present involved by the inexorable logic of events, in a most bitter political struggle. The interest, and I doubt not the convictions of the dominant party will prevent any dispassionate consideration of your case until after the election.

It is declared, and I fear it is widely believed that the spirit of secession still fires the Southern heart, and works through the Democratic party. A mass of honest men are taught and believe that the success of that party means the political re-establishment of the genius of revolt, and the elevation to power of the Southern leaders in the late war. Now, while I do not believe that if the wide-spread suspicion of intent could be discharged from the minds of our people here, there would be a great difficulty in obtaining a fair hearing, it is too potent a weapon of party warfare to be relinquished during this contest for the Presidency. If the Democratic party is defeated in this canvass, it will be because the people fear its success would jeopardize the substantial results of the war. Now, upon this point, the Northern mind is absolutely determined, and no party could maintain itself which should repudiate the war or surrender its acquisitions.

For my own part I think it would be very difficult to get rid of the logical and legitimate results of the war if we tried ever so hard; but still our people are very sensitive on that point. I can not see, for instance, of what value your pet dogma of the Constitutional right to secede would be to you, even if we granted you a dispensation to proclaim it on the house-tops. Constitutional or not, it will never again be practicable, except in the form of revolution, and that is an extra constitutional right which cannot be taken away from any people. Slavery I take to be stone dead, for the reasons you very clearly and ably state in your letter to me. It would never again be of any value to you if you had it back, and the ghost of it, which is so much dreaded at the North, the phantom of involuntary servitude for poverty and color, as a punishment for vagrancy which haunts so many well-meaning men among us, would speedily become a burden so odious and intolerably expensive that, if for no better reason, you would be glad to drop it. But at the same time you must yourselves be well aware that the hasty and inconsiderate legislation upon this subject in two or three of your "States lately in rebellion" did more to fasten universal suffrage upon you than any other one thing.

The North is well aware that there is a wide distinction between civil rights and political privileges, nor were our wisest and most practical statesmen of the Republican party at first inclined to adopt the dangerous experiment of placing political power in the hands of your poor, ignorant field hands upon a mere fanciful theory of the natural equality of man. Doubtless, a citizen of Massachusetts who is utterly illiterate, may be my superior in all manly qualities, but unless he can read the Constitution in the English language, he is not my equal politically. The principle is here admitted that we may and must temper theoretical equality with practical tests of fitness for public duty. Now, this was ignored in your case, because it was urged and believed that thus alone could the blacks protect themselves, and it was said that any admitted qualification would be abused by you to the total exclusion from the franchise and consequent helplessness.

The Northern people, having freed the slaves and left them still mingled with their former masters, could not, with decency or humanity, abandon them naked to the savage enmity which they were taught to believe you felt for them, nor could they calmly look on to see those oppressed of whose comfort and happiness they had become the guardians. The Northern States pardoned the palpable usurpation of a power never granted to Congress upon the plea of necessity. Universal suffrage was no necessary corollary of the war; it was extorted by distrust, offspring of the long slavery agitation. That gave enormous power to the class of politicians who preach the perfect and complete wickedness of the Southern white. These same men urge, and they persuade many, that you still cherish a devotion to the "lost cause," which does not content itself with the hopeless tenderness which we feel for the dead, but is ready to take arms again at the least encouragement.

These fears mingle largely in the canvass, and will exert a strong influence in the result. I think that distrust and fear have dictated your terms more than malice or revenge. It was not cheerfully that the North sacrificed the Constitution for which it fought so long. For my own part, I have never felt any apprehension of losing any of the proper results of the war. I have always believed that you must from necessity yield them as frankly as we claimed them. I have never doubted that it was possible to treat you after your surrender in such a way as to enlist your aid and engage your sympathies in a constitutional restoration of the Union, and yet secure freedom and fairness to the blacks, and tranquility and happiness to the whites. As you very forcibly say, there is no policy possible for you but peace. War now would be your utter destruction. The Union is of more value to you than to us, and to the Constitution alone can you rely for protection.

A general and cordial confidence in your attitude, feelings and protests is essential to your peace and prosperity. We must renew the old spirit within us, or the new Union will be an empty form. Even if, by a party success in a very close vote at the North, aided by your own efforts at the South, you obtain a temporary relief from your abject state to-day, your condition will still be precarious, your path full of snares, and a true Union as distant as ever. So long as one half the North is persuaded that you have the will and the power to jockey them out of what cost them so dear, we attempt to rebuild our Union on the sands. Time alone and a patient and enduring persistence on your part in well-doing, in the face of all discouragement, can effectually remove the cause of your ills; a palliative will but induce a reaction.

A cheerful concurrence in the essential principles of democratic and constitutional government I regard as requisite for your peaceful progress in the future. Inclining to these opinions I should have excused myself from accepting your kind invitation had you not expressly disclaimed any political intent. I do not wish to make any political speeches to your people in the interest of any party, nor add new bitterness to your already dangerous position. But as I have felt the evil very much of late that, of our own knowledge, we were so little informed of the real needs and wishes, and purposes of each other; as I can not feel sure that I may not be of some use, and as I deplore with all my heart the distracted and dissevered condition of our united people, I will meet you as you request, as fellow-citizens should meet in times of difficulty, to consult with you upon your duty at this time. I shall try to speak frankly rather than agreeably, and I shall hope for equal sincerity in return. I need not assure you that what I have written has been dictated by the kindest feelings.

I am not insensible to your trials and sufferings, the loss of friends, prosperity and power, and exclusion from all part or lot in voting away your last pittance, is bitter indeed. But hollow as the ordinary platitudes sound in the sufferer's ear, may it not be in the good providence of God to prove to the uttermost the quality of your people and lead them through these dark ways to a higher and nobler career beyond.

I at least am determined to hope so, and I doubt not may live to see the day when we shall be once more a happy and united people, dwelling in peace under the protection of the Constitution, and within the gentle clasp of our old Union. Then, indeed, South Carolina and Massachusetts may cordially embrace, and the fortunate spokesman of my State, that day, will represent the whole instead of a fraction of her people.

I shall leave home on Monday next, and proceed without delay to Columbia.

I am, gentlemen,
Your friend and servant,
JOHN Q. ADAMS.

A poor, but very pious woman, once called to see two rich young ladies, who also loved the Lord. Without regard to her mean appearance, they received her with great kindness into their drawing-room, and sat down to converse with her upon religious subjects. While thus engaged their brother entered their room. He was a gay, proud, thoughtless youth, and looked much astonished at their unusual guest. One of them rose up with dignity, and said, "Brother, don't be surprised; this is a king's daughter, only she has not got her fine clothes on."

DIED:

BATTLE—In Columbus, Mississippi, December 31, 1867, JOSEPHINE BATTLE, aged eighteen years.

She was a very humble and obedient child, always submissive to those who were older than herself. She was a good example of the golden rule, ever acting toward others as she would have them act toward her. While growing up she was a very pious child; when she had learned to read she became a great lover of the Bible and read it daily. Twelve months before her death she connected herself with the Methodist Episcopal Church in Columbus, and remained a consistent member till her death. During her last illness which lasted for several months she manifested much patience and resignation under her sufferings. She gave much sweet counsel to those around her, and sent messages of love and admonition to her absent associates. She expressed an ardent desire that all would live so as to be prepared for the final change, that they might meet her in heaven. In all her afflictions her Bible was her constant companion, and she dwelt with great delight on the many sweet promises contained therein. When asked if she was willing to die she replied that there was nothing in her way, that all was well with her, and that she was going to rest. She made a special request that each member of the family should meet her in heaven. Near the close she joined with her weeping friends in singing praises to the Lord. Thus her purified spirit took its flight, doubtless to join the Church triumphant in heaven, and swell the ranks of those who have "come out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

BATTLE—In Columbus, Mississippi, April 29, 1868, LETTIE BATTLE, mother of the above, aged sixty-one years

She was born in South Carolina, and came to Mississippi forty five years ago. She was a faithful member of the Methodist Church twenty-five years. From childhood she was noted for good qualities, and when she had grown up, set an example that that was worthy of imitation. During her long Christian life she succeeded in bringing into the Church nine of her daughters, of whom eight are still living and are worthy members of the Church. When about to die she sent for her children that she had led into ways of righteousness and virtue and requested them all to meet her in heaven. She then bade them all good-by and died in great peace.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to | 795 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to | 230 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the nority report, so far as it relates to Mr. Foute, for the majority report.

THE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. Coupland called for the yeas and nays, which were ordered, resulting:

Yeas: Anderson, Bacon, Beares, Blackman, Braughn, Day, Egan, Futch, Jenks, E. L. Jewell, F. L. Jewell, Offutt, Ogden, Ray, Thompson, Todd, White, Wilcox—18.

Nays: Campbell, Coupland, Darrall, François, Kelso, Lewis, Monette, O'Hara, Packard, Poindexter, Pollard, Smith, Whitney, Wittgenstein—14.

The minority report was adopted.

Mr. Campbell, before the vote was taken, made the following statement, and desired it spread upon the minutes. He said:

"I concur fully in the remarks of Senator Coupland, and in his tribute of respect to Judge Foute, whose characteristic courtesy has won for him the kindly feelings of every Senator; but, sir, being in total ignorance of the what his line of defense will be, and having with other Senators been shut out from all attempts to secure a fair and just discussion of this subject, and viewing this proceeding as disgraceful to the Senate in a case of such importance, I shall be compelled to cast my vote in the negative.

Mr. Ogden moved to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. Anderson moved to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE.

The Committee on Elections, to whom was referred the petition of Messrs. Mader, Wilson and Moses, contesting the seats of Messrs. Foute, Braughn and Ogden, beg leave to submit the following report and resolutions:

After this committee had progressed for some days in investigating the alleged frauds committed at said election against contestants, their investigation was arrested on that branch of the case by a resolution of your honorable body, requiring the committee to investigate and report upon the eligibility of the members whose seats are contested, and therefore this report is confined to that branch of the case.

The committee have examined all the witnesses that were presented on both sides, and that examination elicited all the facts in the most favorable light that could be brought to bear to sustain the eligibility of the parties now holding their seats in this honorable body, and the testimony so taken we herewith submit to the Senate for their examination. Messrs. Foute and Ogden were not qualified voters under the registration taken in conformity to the reconstruction acts of Congress, and Judge Braughn, though registered and a voter, it is contended under the proof made in his case, that he is disqualified, and was at the time of his election, from holding a seat in this body; unless by the proviso in the ninety-ninth article of the Constitutin his eligibility is restored and relates back to the time of his election. The committee propose to dispose of this question by the examination of the testimony as it affects each of the gentlemen now holding their seats.

1. The testimony in regard to Hon. M. A. Foute shows conclusively that in 1855 he was elected to the office of District Attorney for the parish of Orleans, took an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and held the office for the full time for which he was elected. This office related to and was a part of the Judiciary of the State, and therefore clearly falls within the provisions of the fourteenth article of the constitutional amendments proposed by Congress and adopted by the requisite number of States and has become the supreme law of the land. The evidence further shows that in the spring of 1861 he was elected and took the office of Judge of the Third District Court of New Orleans and took an oath to bear true and faithful allegiance to the Confederate States of America; some time in the spring or winter of 1862, we find him in a regiment called the Confederate Guards, raised by voluntary enlistment, for State service under the command of Colonel Girault, but transferred by the State on the eighth day of March, 1862, to the service of the Confederate States and placed under the immediate command of Major General Lovell, then in command of the defenses of the city of New Orleans; and said regiment together with the forces of General Lovell left the city upon the approach of the fleet of Commodore Farragut, and a short time after were disbanded at Camp Moore.

This statement of facts renders it entirely unnecessary in the opinion of your committee to examine any of the evidence offered by Hon. M. A. Foute showing his subsequent loyalty and repentance under the provisions of article ninety-nine of the State Constitution. The amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixes his ineligibility beyond all dispute, and his only relief from such disability is in Congress, where thousands have sought and obtained relief and been reinstated in all their political rights. The committee are fully satisfied that, however he may have repented for the part that he took in the unfortunate war against the Union (which we do not undertake to decide), his political status is fixed by the Constitutional amendment, and the Senate can give him no relief. The committee are therefore fully satisfied that Hon. M. A. Foute is not entitled to hold his seat as Senator from the First Senatorial District of the city of New Orleans by reason of his ineligibility.

The next case in order is that of R. N. Ogden, Esq. His right, or more properly speaking, his eligibility to a seat in the Senate depends upon the provisions of and true construction of articles eighteen and ninety-nine of the Constitution of 1868. It is admitted by him that he was not a registered voter under the reconstruction acts, and did not vote at the election held on the seventeenth and eighteenth of April last, and in fact he introduced no evidence that he at any time, even under the administration of Generals Hancock or Buchanan, attempted to register as a voter. Therefore it follows that having failed to do so, in legal contemplation he was not a voter at the time of the election, and at the time he was voted for as Senator. It will be remembered at the election on the seventeenth and eighteenth of April, the Constitution, with all its provisions, had been for a number of weeks published and submitted to the people for their examination, and all its provisions perfectly familiar, particularly to those who were candidates for positions under it, and in this case it is very evident that Colonel Ogden was perfectly aware of the steps he had to take in order to qualify himself to vote or hold office. Having failed, therefore, to make the proofs to render him eligible to vote and hold office, prior to his election, can the proofs he has submitted to the Committee avail him at this time and render him eligible to a seat in the Senate? The proviso to the eighteenth article of the Constitution declares "That no person shall be a Representative or Senator unless at the time of his election he be a qualified elector of the representative or senatorial district from which he is elected." Under this article of the Constitution he must not only be a qualified voter, but of the district where he is a candidate; this proviso is free from all ambiguity or doubt. The question arises how far this article is controlled by the provisions of article ninety-nine; in order to arrive at the intention of the Convention these articles are to be construed together. The object of the Convention that framed the Constitution evidently intended, notwithstanding their great desire to conciliate as far as possible the great mass of those who had been incautiously drawn into the rebellion against the authority of the United States, that the elective franchise should be withheld from those who figured conspicuously, and held offices, either civil or military, under the Confederate States Government, until they give undubitable evidence of their repentance, their loyalty to the Union, and their earnest and open advocacy of the restoration of the States to the Union under the reconstruction acts of Congress, as contradistinguished from the plan of reconstruction by Andrew Johnson. It was not intended that this repentance should be hollow and merely put on, to meet a particular exigency, and to be thrown aside as occasion might require, but it was to be true repentance and the evidence unmistakable. Their lights were not to be hid under a bushel, but to shine before men. The Convention intended that the evidence of the abandonment of the political dogmas of those persons included in the provision of article ninety-nine of the Constitution should be clear and unmistakable in regard to their sincerity. It is very evident, therefore, from all the evidence introduced on the part of Colonel Ogden in relation to his favoring reconstruction, and his desire and efforts to restore Louisiana to the Union fall short of the requirements contained in article ninety-nine of the Constitution. It is true that several witnesses testified that he expressed himself entirely willing to submit to the situation of things imposed upon him by the result of the war, and that he was anxious to see the State restored to the Union as soon as possible, and that he favored the execution of the reconstruction acts of Congress, but the force of this evidence is entirely destroyed by the positive acts, private as well as official, both prior and subsequent to the adoption of the present Constitution; in the first place it is not denied that he was, and still is, a prominent member of the Democratic party, in fact one of its most prominent leaders. And that party almost to a man used their influence to defeat the calling of a convention—the first and most indisputable act to enable the people of this State under the reconstruction acts to resume her relations with the other States of the Union. It is fair therefore to presume, in the absence of any testimony to the contrary, that he acted with the party and opposed the calling of the Convention. Again, after the Constitution had been formed and submitted to the people for their ratification, we find the Democratic party fully organized, with their State Central Executive Committee and other subordinate organizations arrayed to a man in opposition to the Constitution; Colonel Ogden figured prominently as one of their candidates on their ticket headed "against the Constitution," and no man can doubt who knows anything of this contest, that he harmonized and acted with his party in opposing the Constitution under which he claims his seat on this floor. Again we find him, after he had taken his seat in the Senate and after he had attempted to prove by ex-Governor Wells, one of his witnesses, that he was in favor of restoring the State to the Union and favored the adoption of the fourteenth article of the constitutional amendment, he opposed and voted against its adoption, when he well knew that the adoption of said amendment by the Legislature was a condition precedent to the admission of the State into the Union. With what propriety can it be contended after these repeated acts of hostility to the only feasible plan of restoration proposed and supported by the loyal men of Louisiana that he favored reconstruction. Had this amendment against which Colonel Ogden voted been defeated, the State to-day would be out of the Union and under military rule, which the Democratic party pretended so much to detest. We have, therefore, no hesitation in declaring our conviction that the course of opposition pursued by him to all the measures vital to the success of restoration, disposes of all his testimony tending to show his eligibility under article ninety-nine of the Constitution. We do not feel disposed by any disposition we could make, to place him in the unenviable attitude (in the language of one of the witnesses) of "carrying water on both shoulders;" and blowing hot and cold in the same breath.

But for the sake of argument, admit that we are entirely wrong and that the testimony offered proves clearly, that being in the army of the Confederate Government as an officer for and during the war, or at least for more than one year, he returned like the prodigal son, repentant and sorrowful, and united his efforts with the true and faithful to redeem the land from its devastation and ruin, will this make him eligible at the time of his election? Was he a qualified elector under the Constitution at the time of his election? Did he take the steps pointed out in said Constitution in order to remove the disability under which he labored so as to make himself a voter, and consequently eligible to hold offices? The Constitution clearly contemplated that a person claiming the restoration of his elective franchise should do so after and not before the adoption of the Constitution. Its provisions in that respect are prospective and not retrospective. No other construction could be given to the articles of the Constitution, to which we have referred, without coming in conflict with the Reconstruction Acts of Congress. They were operative and the supreme law of the land until official notice was given of the ratification of the Constitutional Amendment; as soon as that was done the State passed from the rule of military law, under the reconstruction acts, to her complete sovereignty as a State under her own Constitution and laws. And our Constitution in point of fact had no vitality until after this transition from vassalage to freedom took took place. When the Constitution took effect all persons claiming office under its provisions must come up to the standard of eligibility as defined in said instrument. If the age of a Senator had been fixed at twenty-five and he had been elected at twenty-one he could not hold his seat. If it required certain other qualifications at the time of his election, such as being a resident of the parish twelve months previous to the election, could a compliance with these provisions after the election was over and before the Constitution took effect remove these disabilities?

Suppose, for example, a candidate for office had been convicted of treasony or other felony, and yet was elected, and either before or after he assumed the duties of his office received a pardon for his offense, could he rightfully claim that his election was legal and valid, and he was constitutionally eligible? We understand that a party must be a legal and qualified voter at the time of, and not subsequent to his election. If he labors under any disability which deprives him of this right, but which might be removed upon his performing certain things, he must comply before this right attaches, and this compliance is a condition precedent to his right of voting or holding office. We are not aware from any testimony before the committee that either Colonel Ogden or Judge Braughn with a full knowledge of the provisions of the Constitution, took any step or made any effort to relieve themselves of the disability under which they knew they labored, by writing and publishing their recantations; by producing to the Register of voters their own sworn statements that they had "openly and actively aided the loyal men to restore Louisiana to the Union." This sudden conversion, this ardent loyalty and great zeal in the cause of restoration was not proclaimed from the house-tops or from the rostrums, but was eked out sparingly in the by ways and private ways unknown to a corporal's guard, and the most of those in sympathy with the great party in this State and out of it opposed to congressional reconstruction, lauding Andrew Johnson for every effort he made to obstruct and defeat the plan of Congress to restore the Southern States to the Union. Your committee are forced to the conclusion, therefore, that if in reality and good faith Messrs. Foute, Ogden and Braughn had taken sides with the loyal men, and actively and openly co-operated with them in their efforts to restore this State to the Union, they never would have been selected as candidates of that party which has always been so unsparing in their open and active hostility to the reconstruction acts. That party would hot have hazarded their success and endangered their plans, by which they expected to overthrow and defeat the loyal party by placing such doubtful men in office.

We think the evidence and history of their political course proves the force of our conclusion.

Having disposed of the question of eligibility of the Hon. M. A. Foute and Colonel Ogden, the remaining inquiry is, is Judge Braughn in any better position?

We think not. By his own admissions and the evidence submitted to the committee, we think it clear that he falls within the disfranchising article of the Constitution above referred to, and we are clearly of the opinion, for reasons above given in regard to Colonel Ogden, that he has not removed this disability in the mode and at the time contemplated by a fair construction of said article.

A majority of your committee, after a very careful and impartial consideration of the question submitted by the Senate for their decision, and with an anxious desire not only to do entire justice to the gentlemen whose rights are involved, but to vindicate our solemn obligation to the Constitution, do recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Hon. M. A. Foute, R. N. Ogden and G. H. Braughn are not entitled, by reason of their ineligibility, to seats in the Senate as Senators from the First Senatorial District of the State of Louisiana.

MORTIMER F. SMITH, Chairman;

R. POINDEXTER,
PATRICK O'HARA.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS, New Orleans, August 5, 1868.

The undersigned member of your committee, while agreeing in the majority report so far as relates in the cases of Hon. M. A. Foute and R. N. Ogden, does respectfully beg leave to dissent from said report in the case of the Hon. G. H. Braughn, believing, as I do, from the evidence submitted, that Mr. Braughn is clearly entitled to the seat which he now occupies in your honorable body.

T. V. COUPLAND.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS, New Orleans, August 5, 1868.

In the case of George W. Mader vs. M. A. Foute, the undersigned member of the committee submits the following report:

That we find Mr. Foute eligible under the laws to take his seat.

If otherwise, Mr. Mader can not take advantage of his ineligibility, as the same laws would apply with equal force to himself, for it is in evidence that Mr. Mader took an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and was afterward an officer in the Confederate army. Consequently he can not question the eligibility or ineligibility of Mr. Foute, as the law forbids him invoking its aid when he is subject to the same legal opposition, i. e., he can not take advantage of his own wrong.

It is in evidence that Mr. Foute aided reconstruction as contemplated by the ninety-ninth article of the Constitution of Louisiana. The recantation is not necessary in the premises.

Section three of article fourteen of the Constitution can not apply to his case, because he never held a judicial or an executive office prior to January, 1861.

But should the Senate differ with the undersigned in the position assumed that he did not hold a judicial or an executive office prior to January, 1861, then the reconstruction acts or the omnibus bill can not affect his position without having a retroactive effect, which is the same as an ex post facto law which is forbidden by the organic law of the land, and which law bears upon it the approval of the accumulated ages of wisdom.

In the case of the contested seat of R. N. Ogden your committee submit that he is perfectly eligible for the same reasons assigned in the case of Judge Foute.

Judge Braughn is a registered voter, and it is in evidence that he openly advocated reconstruction, and is perfectly eligible under the laws to retain his seat.

Therefore, the pretensions of the contestants, George W. Mader, Solomon Moses and David Wilson being unfounded in law and evidence, the undersigned committee recommend that their claims be rejected, and that that M. A. Foute, R. N. Ogden and George H. Braughn be declared entitled to their seats.

Respectfully submitted,
WILLIAM L. THOMPSON.

Mr. Ray offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the petition in the cases of George W. Mader, David Wilson and Solomon R. Moses vs. M. A. Foute, G. H. Braughn and R. N. Ogden, be and they are hereby withdrawn from the Committee on Election and Returns, and are dismissed by the Senate; and the contestants in said cases be allowed the per diem allowed to members of the Senate, from the first day of the session to the present time; that they be allowed to draw the same on their own warrant, countersigned by the chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses for the Senate.

The resolution lies over under the rules.

The House met pursuant to adjournment, Speaker Lowell in the chair.

The roll being called, forty-six members answered to their names.

Prayer by Rev. Mr. Gould.

On motion of Mr. Gray, of St. James, the reading of the journal was dispensed with.

The Speaker expressed his desire before signing bill No. 66 to have entered upon the journal the following protest, which, on motion of Mr. Kent, of St. Helena, was so ordered:

I desire to place upon the journal of the House my objections to House bill No. 66, entitled an act to increase the revenues of the State, and to authorize the incorporation and establishment of the Louisiana State Lottery Company, and to repeal certain acts now in force.

The bill legalizes and sanctions what I consider a great wrong, fosters immorality and vice, and encourages crime; lotteries never being productive of any good, but always conducive to evil, robbing the poor by their seductive charms and infatuations.

This bill creates a monstrous monopoly without any safeguard or assurance that it will not be abused immeasurably. If a lottery is to be established by law there should be a board of control to examine and supervise the conduct of the same. By the provisions of this bill a wholesale robbery can be committed without restriction.

The House passed the bill when there was no quorum present in the bar of the House, undertaking themselves to adjudge what a quorum consisted of, when the Constitution expressly states that a majority of the members of the House shall be necessary for a quorum; and the same Constitution says that the House of Representatives shall be composed of 101 members.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. Page, of Jefferson, presented a petition of Sister Angelica, Directress of the St. Elizabeth's Asylum, praying for relief.

The petition was read, and on motion was referred to the Committee on Charitable and Public Institutions.

Under a suspension of the rules Mr. Harper, of St. Charles, introduced the following resolution, which was adopted on a rising vote of 49 yeas to 5 nays:

Resolved 1. That all clerks and pages of standing committees of this House are hereby discharged from further service as such, except the clerks of the Committee on Enrollment, the number of which may be increased to fifteen by selection from among the discharged clerks of other committees. The chairman of any committee needing a clerk at any time shall apply to the Clerk of the House, who shall detail one from among the enrolling clerks.

2. The Clerk of the House shall appoint three additional pages for the House, who, as well as the nine now employed shall be detailed, or as many of them as may be necessary, by the clerk, one for each committee room, both inside and outside of the building, and each page so detailed shall be instructed to act as page for the several committees occupying said committee rooms during the usual hour of attendance, except during the session of the House when they shall be in attendance on the floor of the House.

3. No resolution or motion by which the number of clerks or pages shall be again increased shall be of any effect, except it is agreed to by fourth-fifths of this House.

4. This resolution shall take effect from and after the fifteenth day of August, 1868.

Mr. Morey, of Ouachita, moved to reconsider the vote last taken.

JOURNAL OF THE SENATE.

Thirty-Ninth Day's Session.

THURSDAY, August 13, 1868.

The Senate was called to order by the President at eleven o'clock.

The roll was called; present the following members:

Anderson, Bacon, Beares, Campbell, Coupland, Darrall, Day, Egan, Foute, François, Futch, E. L. Jewell, F. L. Jewell, Kelso, Lewis, Monette, Ogden, O'Hara, Packard, Poindexter, Pollard, Ray, Thompson, White, Whitney, Wilcox and Wittgenstein—27.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Mr. Turner.

On motion of Mr. Ray the reading of the minutes was dispensed with, after corrections by Mr. O'Hara.

Mr. Beares, from the Committee on Visiting the Penitentiary, reported progress.

Mr. Lewis, from the Committee on Charitable Institutions, reported progress.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. Ray, from the Judiciary Committee, reported as follows:

Favorably upon House bill No. 42, an act to re-establish the burnt records of the parish of Winn.

Favorably upon Senate bill No. 114, relative to delinquent taxpayers.

Mr. Ray, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably, with amendments, upon House bill No. 86, an act authorizing the State Auditor to employ two additional clerks and messengers.

Mr. Campbell presented the following protest:

We protest against the action of a majority of the Senate on yesterday in ordering the previous question upon the cases of the contested seats of Senators Braughn, Foute and Ogden, in disregard of the remonstrances and appeals of the minority, and in refusing to the friends of the contestants an opportunity to present fully and fairly their side of the question, because we believe it was unjust, indecorous, unprecedented and unworthy of the dignity and solemnity which should characterize legislators sitting as judges upon the rights and privileges of the large constituencies, whose lawful and proper representation in this body was at stake. We claim that if the minority had been allowed the privilege of debate, we could have shown, and the facts are, as established by the printed report of the committee, that Senator Braughn is ineligible to a seat in this body; because—

First—He is admitted to have held a commission in the rebel army for more than a year; and

Second—He has neither filed the certificate of recantation required by the Constitution, nor did he prove the fact that he had, prior to January 1, 1868, openly and actively assisted the loyal men of Lousiana in their efforts to restore Louisiana to her position in the Union.

That Senator Ogden is also ineligibile; because—

First—He was not a registered voter, and consequently not an elector, and not eligible as a Senator at the time of his election.

Second—That he was an officer in the rebel army for more than one year; and

Third—That he has not relieved himself of his disability, either by the constitutional certificate of recantation, or by an open and active assistance to the loyal men of Louisiana in their efforts to restore Louisiana to her position in the Union; and

That Senator Foute is ineligible; because—

First—As a judicial officer of the State he had, prior to the war, taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and subsequently engaged in insurrection and rebellion against the Government.

Second—That he held a civil office for one year or more under the Confederate States.

Third—That he voluntarily enlisted in the rebel military service.

Fourth—That he registered himself as an open enemy to the United States Government; and Fifth—That he has not proved any open and active assistance on his part to the loyal men of Louisiana in their efforts to restore Louisiana to the Union, or relieved himself of his disibility by filing the certificate of recantation required by the Constitution, and he is therefore ineligible both under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and of the Constitution of this State.

Thus the majority of the Senate have in our judgment, both in the manner and in the results of their proceedings in the premises, without deliberation, without reflection, and without that fair and impartial hearing of both sides of the case which even ordinary courtesy would seem to demand, upon the indorsement in one case of two, and in the other two cases of but one of the committee done injustice to the rights of the contestants and of their constituencies.

They have, moreover, overruled the solemn judgment of a large majority of their own committee, which had been formed after a long, laborious and conscientious examination of the subject, and excluded from the representation to which they were legally entitled the loyal citizens of a large and important district.

In no spirit of partisanship or of disrespect, either toward the Senate or toward the gentlemen whose seats were contested, but acting upon a solemn sense of our duty and of our responsibility to the people whom we represent, we respectfully ask that this protest be spread upon the journal.

HUGH J. CAMPBELL,
Senator Second Senatorial District Orleans;
A. R. FRANCOIS,
CURTIS POLLARD,
ROBERT POINDEXTER.

On motion of Mr. Campbell the protest was ordered to be spread upon the minutes.

The Committee on Public Health and Quarantine submitted the following report, with a petition of the Board of Health, which were received, and, on motion of Mr. Morey, of Ouachita, made the special order of the day for Saturday next, at one o'clock P. M., and 150 copies of the report and petition of the Board of Health ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC HEALTH AND QUARANTINE, House of Representatives, New Orleans, August 11, 1868.

To the Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN—Your Committee on Public Health and Quarantine, to whom was referred House bill No. 52, entitled an act to protect the health of the city of New Orleans and of the town of Algiers, on the right bank, respectfully submit the following report, which report is made from personal and careful observation on the part of your committee; as also from the opinions and personal experience of persons thoroughly competent to judge on the question. We would inform you that we have in our possession a petition signed by eleven hundred respectable property holders of New Orleans, desiring the removal of this foul nuisance. The first question which would arise on this important matter is: What becomes of the immense quantity of filth and offal which is accumulated at and in the vicinity of the Stock Landing? The result of our investigations on this subject is that it all goes into the Mississippi river, which, if not prejudicial to the health of New Orleans, is certainly very revolting when we consider that the immense suction pipe of the New Orleans Waterworks is immediately below, acting as a small crevasse and sucking in objects floating on the water at a distance of fifty or sixty feet. We would state that when the river is low, it is not uncommon to see the intestines and portions of putrified animal matter lodged immediately around the pipes, and the liquid portion of this putrified matter is sucked into the reservoir, and intestines and other filthy substances frequently seen floating on top of the water near the suction pipe.

Any vessel arriving here with cattle, especially those that have been in a storm, have numbers of dead cattle on board, which they invariably throw into the river at the Stock Landing. These dead and partially decomposed carcasses are again taken from the river and subjected to the process of skinning, after which the carcass or such portions as are rejected, are again thrown into the river. It is not unusual during the sultry heath of the summer months, to see these floating objects mingling with the shipping, and detained there by the eddies, no doubt causing all sorts of diseases among the sailors on board of these vessels.

There is not the slightest doubt in the mind of your committee that this large amount of corrupt and macerated animal matter constantly embracing the densely populated shore, must be extremely prejudicial to the health of the citizens of New Orleans, not only as to its local influence on the immediate vicinity, but the city generally is liable to suffer.

To recapitulate we would state that the two subjects which deserve the most important consideration are—

First—The water we drink, which in summer particularly is contaminated with macerated and decomposed animal matter, which water frequently makes an impression not only on the sense of smell but of taste.

Second—The air we breathe, which at times is contaminated to an incredible degree. The amount of filth carted to the river from different slaughter houses is immense. Barrels filled with blood, urine and other refuse matter, all in an abominable state of decomposition, are being constantly thrown into the water, and floating down the shore, are poisoning the air; and this with other dead animal matter floating in the river causes an abominable nuisance which also exists along the banks of the lower part of the city. We would mention that there is a law which provides for all vessels arriving with cattle to go below Slaughterhouse Point to clean off, and there also throw overboard their dead cattle. It would clearly seem to be to the interest of those people connected with the Stock Landing to insist that the provisions of this law be carried out. They seem, however, to be extremely careless on the subject, and the only way to abolish the detestable nuisance is to remove it to another locallity, and by so ng subserve the best interes ts of the citizens of New Orleans by removing the elements of disease to a locality beyond the city limits, and by taking such steps as will effectually carry out the provisions of the law requiring vessels to clean off below Slaughterhouse Point. By so doing we will remove an evil which is the means of loading the atmosphere with deleterious particles floating in it which produce absolute poisoning, and therefore contagious diseases. We furthermore believe that the city of New Orleans will be in a great measure relieved of the disease known as yellow fever. To say the least of it, pernicious influences will be removed which are illy calculated to subserve the public health. It is well known that contagion is prone to arise from the above specified causes, and that if we do all we can to purify the air we breathe and the water we drink we have done our duty, and shall probably succeed in arresting it, as well as producing a perceptible improvement in the densely populated districts in the neighborhood of the Stock Landing.

The above being the result of our observations as to the sanitary condition of the question, we most respectfully recommend the passage of the bill referred to us, recommending, however, the accompanying substitute for the same.

Very respectfully submitted,
A. W. FAULKNER,
Chairman;
CHARLES GRAY.
B. C. WREN,
WM. MURRELL,
D. C. FOUTS.
Committee on Public Health and Quarantine.

NEW ORLEANS, La., August 10, 1868.

To the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana:

We, the undersigned, members of the Board of Health of the city of New Orleans, would respectfully recommend that the present stock-yards, landings and sales stables, at present located at Jefferson City, be removed to a point on the Mississippi river below the Barracks; and that the point at which all stock, consisting of cattle, of all kinds, hogs, sheep and goats, etc., shall be landed and sold shall be at a point at least from four to eight hundred feet below the present location of said Barracks. That we make the recommendation fully believing that the health and sanitary condition of the city will be greatly improved by the change.

And we would also respectfully recommend as a sanitary benefit to the city of New Orleans that all slaughterhouses and places for killing stock of all kinds shall be removed below a line running west from the upper line of the Stock Landing and sales stables to Lake Pontchartrain.

J. S. SMITH,
President Board of Health;
SAM'L CHOPPIN. M. D.,
S. T. PENNINGTON.

Mr. Yorke, of Carroll, chairman of the Committee on Elections and Qualifications, submitted the following report, which was received and adopted:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, State of Louisiana, Rooms of Committee on Contested Elections and Qualifications, New Orleans, August 12, 1868.

To Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana:

GENTLEMEN—We, the undersigned, members of the Committee on Elections and Qualifications, to whom was referred the case of contest of John G. Selden against James R. Curell, have decided that according to the law governing such cases, they can only consider the charge of "ineligibility," for the following reasons:

That up to the twentieth day of July, 1868, the charge of ineligibility was the only one preferred by Seldon against Curell, and the only charge on which the contest for the seat of said Curell was based.

The law on this point is found in the "Revised Statutes" of Louisiana of 1856, (see page 219, section fifty-four), and reads:

"Any person intending to contest an election shall within thirty days of the election, in case of a Representative or Senator, give to the person concerned a written notice, under his hand, and attested by two subscribing witnesses, stating the fact on which the contest is based, and no other can afterward be admitted; and ten days notice of the time and place of taking depositions thereon must be given to the opposed party."

We believe that Mr. Seldon has complied with the first portion of this section within three days of the meeting of the House; but he then came forward with a second charge of fraud, stating that he found that he could not sustain the charge of ineligibility.

This second notice, which was served on Mr. Curell, has the date of the twentieth of July, 1868, and said Curell swears that it was not served on him until the twenty-second or twenty-third day of that month. The result of election was proclaimed by General Buchanan on the second of June, 1868; hence we see that Mr. Seldon attempted to enter his second charge forty-eight days after the proclamation.

On examining Mr. Seldon on this matter, he at first stated that he did not remember the date of the serving of said charge. But on the next day he comes forward and swears that charges were dated and served on the tenth day of July, 1868.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the said Seldon has not complied with the law, and that he has attempted, by false swearing and false witness, to prove that he did.

The charge of ineligibility we consider Mr. Curell has proven to be without ground, and such is acknowledged by Mr. Seldon. We attach the evidence in this matter to and make it part of this report, and we respectfully recommend to your honorable body that said James R. Curell be sworn and take his seat as a Representative from the Sixth Represeutative District, from the parish of Orleans.

Respectfully submitted.
P. JONES YORKE,
Chairman;
JAMES S. MATHEWS.
JAMES McCULLEN.
DENNIS BURREL.

We, the undersigned, attach our names to this report under compulsion, for reason that Mr. Seldon did not serve upon Mr. Currell a notice of contest upon the charge of frauds, within the limit prescribed by law, for which he alone is to blame; also for the further reason, that in our opinion the ninety-ninth article of the Constitution does not disfranchise Jeff Davis.

HARRY LOTT.
F. C. ANTOINE.

On motion of Mr. Noble, of Orleans, Mr. Curell, of Orleans, was sworn in by the Speaker and took his seat.

JOINT RESOLUTION.

Appointing a Committee to investigate the report of the Grand Jury of the parish of Orleans, concerning Eugene McCarty, Fifth Justice of the Peace, Orleans, Right Bank.

WHEREAS, The Grand Jury of the parish of Orleans has made the following report concerning Eugene McCarty, a Justice of the Peace of Algiers, to wit: That we would respectfully call the attention of the Legislature to Mr. Eugene McCarty, Fifth Justice of the Peace, right bank, who in our opinion is totally unfit for the position which he now holds, instead of being a conservator of the peace, he is acting directly to the contrary, causing or being the cause of disturbances in Algiers. There have been several charges for malfeasance in office brought against him during one term of service by different citizens of Algiers, which cases are now pending against him in the First District Court. We request that the Legislature would investigate these charges against him, impeach and remove him from office. It is our belief that they will find sufficient evidence in these cases that will convince them that it will be a benefit to the community and for the public good that he should be impeached and removed from office. We hope the Legislature will take immediate action in the matter. Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana in General Assembly convened, That a committee of two be appointed by the Chair to meet a committee of three to be appointed by the House of Representatives to take into consideration the aforesaid report of the Grand Jury of the parish of Orleans, and charges therein referred to, and shall be authorized to send for persons and papers, and to report their recommendation to the General Assembly for their consideration with a view of carrying out the provisions of article one hundred and six of the Constitution, if the evidence will warrant the same.

"WHAT DOEST THOU FOR ME."

"THIS I DID FOR THEE—WHAT DOEST THOU FOR ME?"—Motto placed under a print of Christ in the study of a German divine.

I gave my life for thee,
My precious blood I shed
That thou might'st ransomed be,
And quickened from the dead,
I gave my life for thee;
What hast thou given for Me?

I spent long years for thee
In weariness and woe,
That one eternity
Of joy thou mightest know;
I spent long years for thee;
Hast thou spent one for Me?

My Father's house of light,
My rainbow-circled throne
I left for earthly night,
For wandering sad and lone;
I left it all for thee;
Hast thou left aught for Me?

I suffered much for thee,
More than my tongue can tell,
Of bitterest agony,
To rescue thee from hell;
I suffered much for thee;
What dost thou bear for Me?

And I have brought to thee,
Down from my home above,
Salvation full and free,
My pardon and my love;
Great gifts I brought to thee;
What hast thou brought to Me?

O, let thy life be given,
Thy years for Me be spent,
World fetters all be riven,
And joy with suffering blent;
Give thou thyself to Me,
And I will welcome thee.

IN MEMORIAM. *

In the anthems of heaven another voice
Joins sweetly the angelic chorus to swell;
And the white robed choir with hosannas rejoice,
While the exultant thrill of their harp-strings tell
Of the welcome home; for a convoy came,
Of those shining ones, and hovering o'er
Our dearest heard their ravishing song,
And she's crossed with them to the other shore.

O, we caught the notes of their jubilant hymn,
And we almost felt the rustle of wings:
Though our vision with mists of earth was dim,
Yet we saw how the pearly portal swings,
To admit the pure; and the flash of light
As they entered in is glowing still,
Our pathway around making all things bright
With the radiant love of our Father's will.

Yes, heaven is very near to us now,
That our loved one with Jesus has gone to abide;
The way thence seems shortened, we can not tell how;
Yet we know where her footsteps securely the tide
Of death's rushing river have pressed, we all
May in safety pass o'er; and we're listening here
For those seraphim strains, when the angels shall call
To announce that our Savior has bidden us "come."

O, those "mansions" will echo a rapturous song
When the loved gone before us our coming shall greet;
No more partings again 'mid that glorified throng,
No more sorrow or tears, for at Jesus' feet
Forever we'll learn of his wondrous love,
Ah! then we shall know why these severed ties,
Why so early our treasure He garnered above
When we meet in our home beyond the skies.

From Omaha.

OMAHA, October 15, 1868.

Having just returned from a visit to the East, I resume my pen for a chat with absent friends. I have nothing of interest to write relative to our red neighbors, as at present all is quiet along the line of the Union Pacific Railroad. It may be the hush which precedes the breaking out of the tornado, but "sufficient unto to day," etc. I am only too happy to forget my dread of the savage foe for a brief space, and dwell upon more pleasing thoughts.

It was my good fortune to travel as far as Chicago, a few days since, in company with Professor Agassiz, of Cambridge, who, with Hon. Mr. Hooper, of Boston, was returning from a trip to Denver and the mountains. He had made a large and fine collection of natural curiosities both animate and inanimate, and his lectures upon his trip must be intensely interesting. He had one fine living specimen of a most singular looking reptile, found in "Lake Como," on the line of the Pacific Railroad, a species of salamander, he told us, but which has such odd looking projections on the sides of its head like large misshapen ears. The reptile is known in the vicinity where it is found as the "devil-fish."

I wonder why it is that so many natural curiosities throughout our land are dedicated to Satan, or that bear his name? This query has often suggested itself to my mind of late while contemplating many remarkable features in the scenery of the Rocky Mountains. Thus, a ledge of rocks, with dozens of indentations upon its face, resembling in size and shape the boxes in a postoffice, is called the "Devils' postoffice." Another lovely scene receives the name of "Devils' gate," a most quiet, peaceful looking place, by the way, suggesting to my mind nothing devilish or evil, but amid whose recesses there seemed to linger in the soft summer air, a holy calm, a feeling of rest and peace. How well I remember two most attractive places to me among the scenes of my childhood's home, in the Old Bay State, known by the forbidding names of "Devils' den" and "Hell's mouth," and for the eden-like beauty of either place, they would have been far more appropriately named "Saint's rest" or "Paradise."

There are countless scenes throughout the country bearing similar names, some of which, from their wild, rugged and forbidding aspect, seem to merit their appellation, but my experience has shewn me more beautiful, attractive places, commemorating the Prince of darkness. Near Newport, Rhode Island, I visited a place called Purgatory, where the legend affirms the devil threw a poor wretch over into the deep rocky chasm below, and they point to the print of his foot in the solid rock on the verge of the precipice. I suggested that he must have put the "best foot forward," as the indentation really resembles a perfect human foot, while we have reason to believe that his Satanic majesty has good cause for wishing to conceal one of his pedal extremities.

For a week past Omaha has been in a state of intense excitement, and the election returns were hailed by the victorious Republicans with the wildest enthusiasm and delight. I met a Democrat yesterday who confessed with a most rueful countenance, that his party had never been so terribly beaten in this State before. Tuesday last was a memorable day for Nebraska, the hills echoed the thunders of the artillery and wild cheers of the victors all through the night. Having all my life breathed a Republican atmosphere, it was with a thrill of pride and delight that I heard the announcement of a Republican triumph in my adopted State. The telegraph wires have long ere this transported the intelligence over the country, yet I can not refrain from alluding to our splendid, brilliant success. Three cheers for Grant and Colfax, may they be prolonged until the ides of November shall witness the final triumph of right. "Our right makes our might," should be the motto inspiring confidence in every loyal heart, for will not a just God bless the right.

One of the most prominent, substantial and oldest merchants of Chicago and the Northwest, and a life-long Democrat, who has been traveling in Europe for the past few months, says the high price of gold is owing to the possibility of Seymour's election. That in the event of this election millions of our bonds would come immediately to this country, and nothing could be looked for but financial ruin.

The weather here has been very cold for the season, with frequent rains. The frost came very early and was unusually severe, having stripped many of the trees of their foliage in an incredibly short space of time. I have ever experienced a sad pleasure in watching the gradual falling of the leaves of the forest, noting the brilliant hectic, the ensign of decay, fading day by day until the dull hue of death settles upon them, and they rest at ease upon the bosom of mother earth. Consumption in the human family so nearly resembles the fading and dying of the leaves, that a feeling of sadness must ever pervade the autumnal season which recalls to so many of us sad memories of the loved and lost.

"The hand of the reaper
Takes the ears that are hoary,
But the voice of the weeper
Wails manhood in glory.
The autumn winds rushing.
Waft the leaves that are searest,
But our flower was in flushing
When blighting was nearest."

To-day is the finest of the season. A brisk gallop over the prairies in the warm, golden haze of this lovely Indian summer afternoon, was a pleasure I would not forego for all the brilliant city entertainment ever dreamed of or participated in by the most ardent devotee to fashion.

A fair Washington belle said to me last winter, "how can you content yourself away out in that horrid Western country? with no theatres, no opera, no parties, or anything to make life pleasant?" I replied, "your tastes and mine differ, my friend, I love God's theatre, the great stage of nature. God's opera troupe, the wild wood birds have a wondrous charm for me, and I find life very plasant in my western home." My young friend thanked her stars, of course, that she was not in the least strong-minded. She hated stupid books, and of all things, detested the country. Happiness to her consisted in a constant round of excitement amid gay companions, in the bewildering maze of fashionable life, while nature is to her a closed book, from which she might have read so much, not only useful but highly amusing and entertaining. I pity such people for the great happiness they unconsciously miss. I know the dissipations of the city to be fleeting and unsatisfactory, bearing with them an excited, feverish state of enjoyment, and leaving behind them a dismal void, while the ever varying scenes on nature's stage present constant attractions that carry with them a calm, healthful enjoyment, and leave behind them cheerful, pleasant thoughts.

From Mississippi.

SHUBATA, Miss., October 19.

MR. EDITOR — I noticed in your issue of last week that my suggestions in reference to making an effort to secure the Howard Orphan Asylum as a permanent institution meets with your hearty approval. This is a source of great encouragement. The readiness with which you appeal for the two thousand dollars with which you are ready to lay hold and assist. I suggest that if any liberal soul be touched by your appeal they will send the money direct to you, as you are well known throughout our denomination.

I appreciate both the praise and criticism you give the COLORED CITIZENS' MONTHLY. I had anticipated the objection to the word "colored" in connection with the name of this paper, but after much reflection concluded that peculiar circumstances rendered the use of the word compensatory in its advantages.

I am as much opposed to caste as any living man, when it impairs or limits human rights. I am as opposed to civil and political distinctions as I am to the highwaymen who endanger the safety of the traveler. I have no war to make on social distinctions, they are the brakes which restrain and keep within proper limits the popular forces—they are the outer works which protect science, art, literature and virtue. These social distinctions should not make color their basis, this is wicked and disastrous, and yet this evil can only be corrected by beginning with the organic laws of the State and United States. Social distinction on account of color can never be eradicated by opposing the thing itself, but by destroying the cause of it which is the former political tatus of the black man and the general degradation which is thereby inflicted upon the race. To attempt to remove it any other way is as absurd as to attempt to remove the pustules from the face of the small-pox patient by external applications. There is a wide difference between recognizing social distinctions and justifying them, the former is not always tantamount to the latter and is often necessary to the accomplishment of the highest and most important purposes. If the road commissioners fail to have stumps digged up that obstruct a highway it is better that I should drive my team around than over and break it to pieces. It certainly would be better that I should by lawful means, though the process be slow, secure the faithful performance of their duty.

I certainly like the idea of calling the paper the Mississippi Advocate, inasmuch as you have suggested it. I had thought that this would look like an effort to supplant the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE in our State, which is fartherest from my desire. My enterprise is only an experiment. I can not tell how much interest it will enlist nor what favor it will meet from the church, and I hesitate to thrust it forward to take the place of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE which has done so much to make Methodism in the Southwest a power which the nation feels more especially when its support at best is highly uncertain, yet I cannot free my mind from the deep impression of the necessity of a newspaper especially devoted to the interests of the half million colored people of this State.

QUARTERLY MEETINGS.

Sunday before last I held quarterly meetings at Macon. The church is in good condition. Five services were held; at each the house was not large enough to hold the people, for they had come in for twenty miles around. There was great rejoicing among Christians, conviction, conversions and an accession of nineteen members to the church. The people manifest great love and regard for the pastor, Rev. Wesley Jones. I asked them on Sunday night for a collection for his support, and in less than five minutes they placed upon the table nineteen dollars and twenty-three cents. Mr. Henry Macon, a steward of the church, gave me a princely reception, considering the times and locality. He kept his table loaded with luxuries, free to all the local preachers or leaders from a distance, who had business with me. Never in my life have I been the recipient of a more profuse hospitality than at Macon. The people surfeit me with kindness and I may add homage. Truly, the good people of Macon have the homage of my thanks, my labors and prayers. A very prominent local preacher from Winston county joined us—this secures a new society in that thoroughly Ku-Kluxized county, as I sent him back with instructions, to which he adds an indomitable will and zealous heart. One feature about Brother Jones' administration is, that societies in the surrounding country are fostered by the church at Macon and are in a flourishing condition.

After leaving Macon I visited Shuqulak—here the people are sadly in need of a church, they have no ground to build upon, and are very poor, but they are united, devoted to the "Mother Church" and quite hopeful.

From Shuqulak I went to Enterprise. Here a great work is going on. During my stay there were several conversions and twenty-two joined the church. I shall return to this place in a few days to hold quarterly meeting.

SHUBUTA.

Last Saturday and Sunday I held quarterly meeting at this place. The quarterly conference is the largest in the district, numbering thirty-six members. The circuit has ten appointments, and the membership is near a thousand. Rev. Jesse Fern is is the preacher in charge and has been instrumental in doing a great work. I preached and administered sacrament at two points on the Sabbath by riding fourteen miles, which gave me the appearance of a Sabbath-breaker from the rapid gait at which my horse was kept. Much good was accomplished, a large number were baptized and received into full membership, and fifty-two at Shubuta and Liberty joined the church on probation. The Lord is pouring out His spirit.

Miss M. L. Jarvis, of Oberlin, Ohio, one of the pioneer teachers of this State, has just commenced her school here. This accomplished lady has taught for near two years at Meridian, and the good resulting from her labors at that place is beyond estimate. She has now fifty-one scholars and will in a few days have about a hundred. The school is taught in our church. Our next quarterly meeting will be at Enterprise.

Dress.

One can scarcely take up any public journal without being confronted with an article under the above caption The pertinacity with which the subject is exhibited in its various aspects, and the attention given it by the public, would seem to imply that it has some just claim as a subject of interest and importance, some little germ of truth about it, keeping it alive. It is a very apparent fact what it is a subject upon which much advice and many a pet hobby is advanced, but it is not so apparent that the medium and sensible view of the matter is, as there are extremists whose ideas seem both foolish and irrational.

Very much is said about the extravagancies of the present state of society being due to the absorbing love of display manifested by the feminine portion of humanity. Harsh invectives are hurled against velvets, silks, laces and the thousand and one etceteras of expensive toilette. The plain habits and simple tastes of our grandmothers and great-grandmothers are held up before us with sighs and comments in regard to the vanity, vanity, vanity, indulged in by the ladies of the present day. Very little is heard about broadcloths, beavers, patent-leathers, canes, kids, cigars and merschaums; but it is the extravagance of the female sex which is ruining the financial prospects of their fathers, husbands and brothers, while little is said about the surprise the great-grandfathers of our gay young gentlemen would experience, should they arise from a Rip Van Winkle sleep and behold their elegantly attired grandsons.

Granted that the ladies do spend too much in personal adornment, yet the query arises, at one of the full dress entertainments given in fashionable circles, (overlooking entirely the small (?) amount involved in the full dress toilets of the gentlemen) which would be found to incur the most expense, the splendid toilettes of the ladies, or the magnificent array of every thing that can cater to the taste of the most refined epicurean, from the choicest confections to the rarest brands of wines? Thousands of dollars are expended for a few moments' gratification of the sense of taste, and why is it worse to gratify the sense of sight by exquisite arrangements of fabric, which is certainly the more enduring and more inoncent of the two? I predict that when society arrives at that state of perfection when gentlemen are willing to forego club suppers, cigars, billiards and costly champagnes, they will find ladies equally ready to retrench some of their expensive habits of a much less harmful nature.

I do not wish to be considered as defending the blind devotion displayed by too many of our sex in the foolish line of dress, but I do think they are charged with more of the present evils of society than is justly their due. It is a very lamentable fact that many ladies in our extremely fashionable circles make a complete idol of dress and scarcely think, speak, or care for anything else more ennobling. At the same time, there are many refined, cultivated and noble ladies, and I believe they are in the majority, with an exquisite sense of all that is beautiful, who love dress without that selfish devotion to it which absorbs all else.

I believe that it is every person's duty to look as well as one can, and that a certain regard to the harmony and propriety of dress is as much a duty as any other necessity of our being. Nature is certainly a safe teacher, and we find her decked in beautiful foliage, rocks covered with delicate mosses, and rough banks brightened with creeping vines and tendrils. Nothing in nature is bare and repulsive, and is it not right to suppose that God gave us the sense of sight with the different effects of light and color for true enjoyment, to be used with moderation, as one of the most charming faculties of our nature?

A lady passed on the street, one day, very poorly attired, with no regard to proportion, color, or style in her dress, yet with no appearance of any particular want of funds. My companion remarked, "I believe that lady is a Christian from the manner in which she dresses." I did not view it in the same light; for it seemed to me she could have performed every Christian duty just as faithfully, and perhaps might have had more influence in some directions, had she devoted a few moments' thought to a neat and attractive appearance. A pleasant effect strikes us pleasantly, and we can not help it; it is implanted in our nature. It requires no more expense and but little more time, when one is purchasing apparel, to select that which is best adapted to their face and form, than it does to choose without discretion something ungainly and inharmonious. It seems to me, too, that one ought to study what is most becoming to one's self. Dahlias would not look as well on a drooping fuschia as they do on their own erect stalk, neither would a bunch of scarlet geranium look well on the tender vine of a blue-bell. There is a perfect adaptation in nature between every flower and its foliage.

One need not dress expensively to dress well. To be sure there is a certain richness of dress characterized by expense, which is very pleasing to indulge in, to gratify the fastidious taste of a refined nature, if one's income will admit of it. But there is a certain artistic blending of color and shade making an harmonious whole, "which just a few women possess," and which is very desirable. A pretty ribbon, gracefully disposed, and a spray of delicate flowers, or tiny leaf and bud, will sometimes give a delightful effect to the simplest dress; a more pleasing effect than diamonds even have the power to produce.

The dress question is not as insignificant an one as many might be disposed to consider it. It is one of those vexed subjects which are constantly facing us, and which ought not to be thrust aside without a proper amount of consideration. It pervades all our social and commercial relations. There are elements of political economy involved in it. It is the means of circulating capital among all classes, and furnishes employment to those who in turn supply manufacturers with trade, by their own consumption. Thus by a reciprocal process keeping up a constant demand and supply of labor and capital, thereby promoting the industrial habits of the people and aiding rather than retarding the progress of the world toward improvement.

From the Churches.

Rev. Mr. Bryan writes from St. Martinsville, Louisiana, October 20:

We are having still trouble around the country but none at this place new. I have not been out on the circuit since the first of the month. The meetings at Lafayette continue to be excellent. I do not have any night meetings, the people do not like to go out after dark and many live in the country, but we have good congregations on Sabbath. We have no day school now as the teacher is gone. Sunday school is well attended. We have had a long northeast rain; corn is selling for fifty cents a barrel; produce is cheap but money very scarce. We are praying that God will bring about peace throughout our land.

BATON ROUGE.—Brother Hayward, of Baton Rouge, writing from that place October 18, says:

We held a protracted meeting from Monday night the twelfth to Friday night the sixteenth. I have had great opposition, but the Lord has been among us and blessed our labors. On Sunday morning fourteen rose and proclaimed themselves adopted into the family of Christ.

We expect to continue the meeting this week, as the altar is crowded with mourners. My only business here is to cry "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

The prospects of our church here are excellent.

Rev. E. Jackson writes from Washington, Louisiana, October 16:

Last Sunday I was sent for to visit old Father Randall Washington. Though somewhat delirious the words of God gave him much comfort. He died and was buried October fifteen, passing away with great joy. He was eighty years of age and grieved very much at what had been done in his house. His son-in-law was taken out at night by some white men and killed, leaving a wife and three children, one an infant; the old man never lifted up his head after that. A member from Opelousas tells me that the people there are so distracted that the gathering of crops is neglected. Many colored people have their registry papers taken from them to keep until election so as to insure their voting properly. I was met on Saturday by a Doctor MacMillan who said my life was in danger, because one of my own color told him I had written to New Orleans for troops and was going about telling the people not to join the party. He laid it to the colored Baptist preacher, but I proved to him that it was not so, never having been outside the town since the riot. Our people gather to church Sunday as well as ever in the day time.

HOLLY SPRINGS DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI.—Rev. A. C. McDonald, Presiding Elder of this District, says:

Our work is progressing grandly in this district. I have been in a constant revival for five weeks. Every quarterly meeting resulting in accessions to the church. Since I left home on the eleventh of September, I have taken three hundred and five members into the church. In one place a preacher from the church South and forty-nine white and twelve colored persons joined us. I came yesterday from Aberdeen where there were seventy persons at the altar seeking religion. In three days sixty-seven persons had joined our church on probation. Last night we commenced a meeting at Okalona with twenty persons forward on the first invitation for prayers.

I shall not be surprised if the fourth round on the district shall result in the addition of a thousand persons to the church.

Pray for us and our work.

Thoughts on Marriage.

My young maiden friends, love is not a possession, but a growth. The heart is a lamp with just oil enough to burn for the hour, and if there be no oil to put in again, its light will go out. God's grace is the oil that fills the lamp of love. And if there be one thing that every woman, above all others, should say to herself, in the ambition of her married life, it is this: "I can not be respected and loved as I must needs be to be happy, unless I can bring something more than myself. It must be God in me that shall maintain me in that dignity and fullness of proportion, and nobleness and impressiveness which shall win and hold love? And a godless woman entering into the marriage relation, goes as a lamb to the slaughter. Wreaths of flowers are about her neck; but the knife is not far off.

It is sad—the desecration of love. It is the saddest thing on earth. There is nothing that touches, it seems to me, the contemplative heart more than that. To see what it might be, if these early days are prophets of possibility, and then to picture it as it is, is sad indeed. And more than anything else in the world, it fails for want of food. No other food for love is there but goodness. Love can not any more burn without goodness than the flame without fuel. The sorrows that must go with you all your life, or break suddenly upon you somewhere, can not be borne without the support of God's ministering angels. As your household grows around you, and your children begin to feel the tides of life, and you become in turn their guides, as your parents were yours, you will find that no one can bear life well who has not God somewhere, a present help in time of trouble.

If there be anything that young wedded love should have as its first vision, it is the ladder between earth and heaven, and the angels of God ascending and descending, and God over all, blessing it. Begin your household life, begin your wedded life, with a firm hold on God, on purity, on heaven. Then there will be hope for you. Otherwise take the winter-fate.—Sermon on Jacob's Vision, by Beecher.

Our venerable friend, Peter Cartwright, D.D., was able to be present at the late session of the Illinois Conference, and to participate as usual in its proceedings. As will be seen by the Conference appointments in another column, he has been reappointed presiding elder. This is his fiftieth appointment to that office, and his sixty-fifth annual appointment in the itinerant ministry. He has never occupied a superannuated or supernumerary relation. Recently his labors on the district have seemed to be too severe for his physical strength, and many of his friends believed that his active ministry was near its close. At the Conference session, after representing his district, which he described as in a prosperous condition, he stated that he came to the Conference with the purpose of asking a change of relation. In characteristic terms he said he knew he was in the neighborhood of his second childhood. He was glad there were men who could be more active and useful, and though he was willing to do all he could in the itinerant ranks, he did not wish to be "a wet log in the Conference;" he would rather retire now than be a burden to the work. His children and grandchildren had married and left him, "and now," said he, "myself and wife are like two old rats alone in a barn." After paying an affecting tribute to his associates in itinerant labor, he closed by saying that he wanted to "die in the harness." When he sat down, Rev. J. L. Crane and others spoke in highly eulogistic terms of Dr. Cartwright's prolonged and useful services. The following preamble and resolution were then adopted:

WHEREAS, Rev. P. Cartwright, D.D., if he should live, will have been at the end of next year a presiding elder for fifty years, and as he is the only man who has ever occupied that position for so great a length of time, and in view of his age, experience and great labors among us, therefore

Resolved, That H. Buck, J. H. Moore and W. E. Johnson be a committee to arrange, during the Conference session of 1869, for a jubilee to be held by the preachers in honor of Dr. Cartwright's being presiding elder for fifty years.—New York Christian Advocate.

It is a sad commentary upon the course of instructions pursued in young ladies' schools, that the graduates seldom know how to dacline marriage.

Jerrold went to a party at which a Mr. Pepper had assembled all his friends, Jerrold said to his host, on entering the room: "My dear Mr. Pepper, how glad you must be to see all your friends mustered."

JOURNAL OF THE HOUSE.

Forty-First Day's Session.

FRIDAY, August 14, 1868.

An act appropriating $100,000 for the pay of mileage and per diem of members and employes of the General Assembly, and the contingent expenses of the same.

Respectfully,

On motion of Mr. Morey, of Ouachita, the rules were suspended, the bill placed on its second reading, and referred to the Committee of the Whole; 150 copies ordered to be printed.

The Committee on Claims submitted the following report, which was received and accepted:

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a resolution offered by Hon. R. H. Isabelle, to allow four months salary to W. W. Handlin for the vacation term of 1864, of the Third District Court of New Orleans, of which he had been Judge, respectfully report as follows:

They have examined into the facts of the case, and have ascertained them to be as follows: On the third of November, 1863, said Handlin was appointed Judge of the said court by George F. Shepley, then military Governor. On the thirteenth of July, 1864, the said Handlin, in a suit entitled "John Osman and wife vs. Charles Roman, No. 17,946 of the docket of said court," decided that slavery still existed in the parish of Orleans, and that the plaintiffs, being slaves, could not maintain an action in court. Slavery had already been abolished in this State by an ordinance of the convention of 1864, then in session; and the institution had also been impaired, if not absolutely done away with, by orders from the military commander of this department. For rendering this decision Judge Handlin was the next day removed from office by Governor Hahn, who, besides setting forth the facts above mentioned, officially stated that Judge Handlin in the rendition of his judgment has, in disregard and violation of a constitutional duty and time-honored custom, neglected to refer to the law, or give the reasons on which the judgment is founded. The removal was immediately carried into effect, and Judge Handlin never performed any services as judge after that date; on the contrary, he shortly afterward left the city for the summer months. He now claims salary from the date of his removal from office until the subsequent reopening of the court in November, 1864. Were he entitled to receive this amount of pay he would be equally entitled to receive pay for the winter months of 1864 and 1865.

The claim is one without equity or law, and should not, in the opinion of your committee, be allowed. They therefore respectfully report against the resolution referred to them.

Respectfully submitted,

J. H. McVEAN,
Chairman;
S. E. CUNY,
JOHN GARSTKAMP,
P. JONES YORKE.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS,
New Orleans, August 15, 1868.

To the Honorable Members of the Senate:

By a resolution of the Committee on Elections, as no contestant for the seat of the Hon. R. W. Futch has appeared before them, the following affidavit of Mr. Thomas L. The effect of laying the affidavit on the table will be that it will there be subject to be taken up at any time. ### Governor Warmoth and General Rousseau.

In another column our readers will find General Rousseau's military order on civil affairs, and the people should now understand the precise relation of the civil and military authorities in this State. We hold the following facts:

1. That by the law of Congress and the instructions of President Johnson, the military are subordinate to the civil authorities; that the latter act at the request of the former, and will cease to act at the Governor's official intimation.

2. That as all well organized governments are sustained by two forces—moral and military—said governments are never failures until both the moral and military forces are exhausted. In these turbulent times Governor Warmoth found his moral force inadequate to keep the peace, and has therefore fallen back upon his military support, which is now maintaining the civil authorities of the State.

And we are glad to record that General Rousseau has acted wisely and promptly in the matter, and well deserves, as he will receive, the thanks of all good citizens throughout the country. Like a true soldier, he has sought to do his duty.

"Let Him Leave."

This is what the Times says to Governor Warmoth. It is said right in the midst of riot, tumult and bloodshed, provoked and led on by the partisans of the Times. This is the lesson which it reads to the Governor. In other more civilized parts of the Union a leading paper would probably have varied the advice by saying to the mobs, "Let them leave—disperse," and it would have given all its moral support and encouragement to the officers of the law and not to the law-breakers.

This is no new thing here. We think that we have heard of such things before. It was a way the Times people had before the war with folks who differed from them. We don't think Governor Warmoth will leave. What was one of the things we gained by the war, the right of every American citizen to go where he pleases; stay where he pleases; say what he pleases, and do what he pleases, being responsible to the law for any abuse of these privileges.

Governor Warmoth is a noble, brave man, who has discharged his duty under very trying circumstances with courage, fidelity and ability. He is Governor by the grace of God and the will of the people. He will remain Governor for his lawful term. The military of the United States are pledged to the maintenance of the civil government. It will be maintained and murderers and leaders of mobs will hang.

PLAYING BLUFF.—What a magnificent game of bluff the Democrats have been playing for a week past in our city, to force the State officials to resign. That's it, in a nut shell.

Armed Democrats have entered the houses of our colored people and taken away their registration papers. Will not this invalidate the coming election?

General Steedman, a Democratic CARPET-BAGGER, is our Chief of Police. Carpet-baggers are in demand.

Christian Trials.

Among the mysteries of human life none are more perplexing than the difficulties in a good man's way, the opposition he meets with on every hand and the sturdy fight he has to make all through his earthly journey. It is the traveler in eastern lands, among wild desert tribes, bearing about his armature of defense or offense, and by night or day ever ready for the foe—or the mariner on stormy seas, tacking and beating here and there, struggling against adverse winds and tides, by oar and sail, endeavoring to reach the peaceful harbor. So far as one's self is concerned it may more easily be comprehended. A multitude of reasons could be suggested in any minds, to account for weaknesses, failures, faults; ever calling for toil, watchfulness, assistance, and involving constant disappointments, mortifications of pride, self condemnation, and sometimes the anguish of a fear lest heaven itself be forever lost.

These are the peculiar trials of a really good man, of the sincere Christian. They are far from being imaginary, though unseen and unknown perhaps to all without. Those persons who carelessly glide along on the world's treacherous tide, sleeping and waking, eating and drinking, or reveling unconcerned as they are borne down to death and the dread beyond. These stoics or epicures may make a mock of peculiar Christian trials and with specious reasoning or recklessness, pronounce such a life experience to be morbid and needless, or brand its professors as designing and hypocritical. Unbelief is easy; any simpleton can be an infidel, for infidelity is simply a negative—nothing. The seeker, the philosopher or lover of wisdom, pursuing his earnest search after the true, possessed with a passionate love of purity, which is heaven on earth and forever, will soon discover within himself elements of discord which only a constant recourse to God, his maker, will enable him to control, and will learn that only one hand has skill to tune to heavenly harmonies, fallen man's wondrous spirit.

It is usually the case that the young disciple of Christ falls into error, from an idea that conversion, that grand miracle, has exempted him forever from trial or temptation; so tangible is the change, so rapturous his joy, so great the deliverance from sin and the world's power, that he easily conceives himself to be peculiarly favored, a condition in which pride and consciousness is often indulged; or at best on the first approach of temptation, at the first trial of faith, indulges doubts as to his conversion or questions whether religion is a reality. He has not learned that God has just enlisted and armed him for spiritual conflict, that within and without will be a fierce, ceaseless battle, and strangest to him, that mankind will be his combined, bitter, unreasoning foe. The Christian has to accept the situation, it is unavoidable, resulting from the nature of things, for "offenses must needs come," though a fearful woe is pronounced against such as willingly co-operate with a sinful nature and greedily do its vile behests.

All the logic of the Gospel is employed to teach us that the world is God and man's enemy. "Love not the world, neither the things in the world." It is an understood, if not acknowledged antagonism, both sides feel it and act accordingly. For every conversion, the world has lost a votary; its prince has one soul less in his toils, and Christ has a jewel the more in his kingly crown. Let the good man then take courage; draw your lines clearly, carfully set your guard and with calm, assured faith, be ready for every emergency, expect nothing here but the soldier's fare and duty, cast all your care upon the great Captain of your salvation, leave results, circumstances, combinations with him; be not disheartened by apparent failures, by unfavorable conditions, by frowns, misjudgments, persecutions, "all are years," even "to die is gain." It is such soldiers Jesus wants, such only accomplish great things for him, the meddlers, and murmurers, and trimmers are little worth, they are like camp followers to an army. None are so holy or so perfect as never to be assailed with temptation or hated by the ungodly; all the saints have traveled this road, so "think it not strange." In all these furnace fires there is with you always the form of the Son of God, who has promised that with every trial he will provide you the power of endurance or the means of escape.

The eloquent Bishop Hall utters this sublime apostrophe.

"Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Saul strikes in Damascus; Jesus suffers in Heaven. Thou smitest, He smartest. These are what remains of his sufferings. In himself it is all finished, in his members it is not; we must toil and suffer that we may reign. Now we are set upon the sandy pavement of our theatre, and matched with all sorts of evils; evil men, evil spirits, evil accidents, and worst of all, our own evil hearts; temptations; crosses, persecutions, sickness, wants, infirmities, death. All these must in our course be encountered, by the law of our profession. What should we do but strive and suffer as our Captain hath, that we may reign as he doth. God and his angels sit upon the scaffolds of the heavenly amphitheatre and behold us. Our crown is ready; victory is certainty; a day of deliverance is close at hand, our redemption is near, when the tears shall be ped from all faces, and those who have sown in tears shall reap in joy."

Obituary.

Seventeen beautiful years and life is ended. Seventeen years of "faith, hope and charity." Seventeen years of single life; six months and five days of married life. How loving, charming, fleeting. Born March 31, 1851, in Belmont county, Ohio, Mrs. OELLA CHADICK ADAMS departed this life, in New Orleans, Louisiana, October 21, 1868. Robed for her bridal, the beautiful creature stood before me, April 18, 1868, to plight her heart and hand to him who had won the first, and who had been promised the second, and in six months thereafter, this fair creature, clad in the same bridal robes, lay before me in the coffin, awaiting her burial. Surely, in the language of the old prophet, we may say, "Her sun went down while yet it was day." But Providence had smiled upon her as not upon many others. At the tender age of ten years her mother became a Christian, and five years after his marriage, her father became pious; and thus from the earliest recollections of childhood she was taught to lisp a Savior's name. While yet but eight years old, "Sweetie" (for that was her pet name) gave her heart to Jesus. Mary, a beloved and only sister, had gone to the altar first, when "Sweetie," unasked and unaided, went to the altar and offered her little hand to the minister of Jesus, and thus early she became a member of the church. Obeying the wisest and most impressive injunctions in Ecclesiastes, she remembered her Creator in the days of her youth; nor did she despise that other great saying of inspiration: "I love them that love me, and they that seek me early shall find me." And could her sweet lips again speak, would she not sing:

"Youth is the time to seek the Lord,
The time to insure the great reward."

Uniting in her person grace, gentleness and beauty, her intellect was clear and active, while in spirit she was confiding, affectionate and true. To strangers she seemed reserved and even timid, but to those she loved best she was the most enjoyable of companions. She belonged to that class of persons whose words are few but whose thoughts are many. As a daughter, she was dutiful and loving; as a sister, kind and attentive; as a wife, affectionate and confiding. Did the sanctites of home permit, did not delicacy forbid, we might lift the domestic curtain and see a youthful couple devoted to each other's every wish and happiest when in each other's society. Theirs was a honeymoon which had lasted till the ruthless destroyer severed the tender ties which bound them together, and so near were the bridal and the burial that the song of the nuptials and the wail of the obsequies mingled in each other.

But her death was more extraordinary than her life; indeed, it was more extraordinary than any I have witnessed in a ministry of twenty years. Calling at the home of her beloved uncle on the evening of October 15, she was suddenly taken ill and so rapidly did the disease gain the mastery that on the following Sunday noon but little hope was entertained of her recovery. And now began that extraordinary religious experience which has dispelled the darkness of the tomb and made the grave "bud and blossom like the rose." Her natural timidity gave way to a womanly confidence and her natural reticence to a full and cheerful communication of her thoughts and feelings. "Like apples of gold in pictures of silver" were her last sayings. Jesus had revealed himself to her as He does not unto the world. The preciousness and sustaining power of a religious faith were to have another living exemplification and Christianity another witness of which the world was not worthy. From the lips of loved ones I have gathered a few of her last and most memorable sayings. On Sunday her mother inquired: "If you do not get well can you trust your Savior?" when in the utmost confidence she replied, "Yes, mama, I can." It was on Tuesday morning she said to her sorrow stricken companion: "Dear Eddie, we have walked side by side in life but a little while, but we have been very happy and could be for many years to come, but if God wants 'Sweetie' she will have to go." During her illness she expressed a desire to die in the daytime and would long for the morning to come to behold its beautiful light. It was after a painful and restless night that she called for her uncle (Captain Armstrong) to pray with her, and rejoiced when the soft, pure light of the morning came. More than once she joined with Captain and Mrs. Pierce and sang some sweet hymns, and among them was:

"Jesus lover of my soul
Let me to thy bosom fly."

It was on Wednesday morning that all hope of her recovery fled and to console the companion of her youth she tenderly said: "Darling boy, I'll watch for you to come to heaven as I watched from our little gallery for you to come home from the office, but the meetings on the gallery are nothing to what that one will be up there"—she pointing to the skies. Her composure when talking of death was most remarkable. Her mother inquired her wish as to her burial robes to which, in childlike confidence, she said: "I have no choice, God won't look at 'Sweetie's' clothes. He has a white robe for her there."

It seemed a mystery to all and to none more than her husband that one so young should die, but she solved the doubt, saying to him: "Perhaps God thought you were getting too proud of me and that we both might learn to forget Him, so He is going to take 'Sweetie;' and, darling boy, you will come as soon as God wants you." Like all young men of spirit he had had his plans and was telling her how that he had intended to furnish and make home so pleasant for her when to the surprise of all present she lifted her finger heavenward and said sweetly: "In my Father's house are many mansions, if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." To many of her friends she sent messages of affection and to one young gentleman, a personal and dear friend, she sent the endearing words: "Tell him that our acquaintance has been pleasant and he must meet me in heaven." Although a member of a Church she had never been baptized, which was an omission on the part of others and as the result of this omission she had come to believe that water baptism was not necessary. But on Thursday morning last she and her husband and sister, Mary, were solemnly consecrated to God in holy baptism; and then followed the sacrament of the Lord's Supper and thus she had the happiness to see her dear companion baptized, partake of the Holy Sacrament and give his heart to Jesus, that all his life may be devoted to the Master, and at length meet "Sweetie" in heaven. When leaving her for the last time I inquired: "Have you any fear?" to which she triumphantly replied, "All bright, Doctor, all bright." As she said to her cousin, "I shall be first in heaven," and to-day she is there waiting our coming.

How blest the righteous when she dies,
When sinks a weary soul to rest;
How mildly beam the closing eyes!
How sweetly heaves the expiring breast.

So fades the summer cloud away:
So sinks the gale when storms are o'er,
So gently shuts the eye of day:
So dies a wave along the shore.

Why Should Not the Southern People Vote for Grant?

1. Because he is their conqueror; and they have reason to expect from him, fairness and clemency. Magnanimity belongs to the conqueror, and such have ever manifested this noble quality, except where the vanquished have merited extermination by their inhuman cruelty and mad persistence against their antagonists. Take the great conquerors of the past, such as Cyrus, and Alexander, and Napoleon I, and Wellington, and Washington, who were content with conquest for the cause they considered right. And in the display of this noble quality Ulysses S. Grant has no superior among his illustrious predecessors. It is true, with an iron will and an iron hand, he persisted in crushing the rebellion, and did crush it; but what then? When Richmond fell; the Confederacy overthrown; Davis in full flight, and Lee vanquished, he displayed the generosity of a true soldier, and granted such terms of surrender as shall be the admiration of men of all nations, and the pride of the American people in all ages. To spare the feelings of Lee, it was General Grant who FIRST proposed a surrender; and with what courtesy and kindness did he conduct the interview on his part; and how magnanimous were the terms he granted. Here they are:

APPOMATTOX COURT HOUSE,
Va., April 9, 1865.

GENERAL—In accordance with the substance of my letter to you of the eighth inst., I propose to receive the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia on the following terms, to wit: Rolls of all the officers and men to be given to be made in duplicate—one copy to be given to an officer designated by me, the other to be retained by such officer or officers as you may designate. The officers to give their paroles not to take up arms against the Government of the United States, until properly exchanged; and each company or regimental commander sign a like parole for the men of their commands. The arms, artillery and public property to be parked and stacked and turned over to the officers appointed by me to receive them. This will not embrace the side-arms of the officers, nor their private horses or baggage. This done, EACH OFFICER AND MAN WILL BE ALLOWED TO RETURN TO HIS HOME, NOT TO BE DISTURBED BY UNITED STATES AUTHORITY SO LONG AS THEY OBSERVE THEIR PAROLES AND THE LAW IN FORCE WHERE THEY RESIDE.

U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant General.

To General R. E. LEE.

Magnanimous soldier! He had the greatness to be generous to a vanquished foe. It would have been nothing strange had the memoirs of Libby Prison, and Andersonville, and of the hundreds of thousands of his slain comrades, and of the desolate homes in his own North, constrained him to demand an unconditional surrender, and thus exposed the vanquished to exile or to the gallows; but he said then as he says now: "Let us have Peace." Lee is an ingrate if he does not vote for General Grant.

And has not General Grant ever sought to keep both the spirit and letter of the terms of capitulation? More than once, both in Congress and out of Congress, have efforts been made to bring Lee and his Confederate Generals to trial, but such efforts were neutralized by the hero of Appomattox; and the man who was magnanimous in the past will be magnanimous in the future.

2. The people of the South should vote for Grant, for the reason that they have cause to expect wisdom and justice under his administration. Taking him as a whole, he is the wisest man in the United States; that is, he has displayed more common sense, in his department, than has been displayed in the same department, or in other departments of the state under similar circumstances. Hamilton was a profounder publicist, and Jefferson a more comprehensive statesman than Washington, but the latter had a mind more evenly balanced than either, and was wiser than both in dealing with great practical questions. Chase and Johnson and Seymour may be technically superior statesmen to Grant, but the latter is superior to all of them in just discriminations, in thoroughly understanding what the people want, and is more completely the embodiment of the Constitution of the United States, and of the American people. We would rather have one of Grant's epigrammatic definitions of constitutional law than the long winded disquisitions of either of the above trio. Under his wise and benign administration this country will attain a degree of prosperity unknown in all the past; and not to vote for him is ingratitude, folly, madness.

3. Grant is a tried man; Seymour is not. Upon the former have rested responsibilities graver than any that can come from the presidential chair; while the latter is known only as a Governor of one State. Grant has never decived the people of the South; Seymour has time and again. He deceived them in the commencement of the war, in failing to bring his Northern Democracy to support the rebellion effectively; he deceived them in 1864, in announcing the war a failure, which lost the election to McClellan; and he is deceiving them now with promises to which no sane man in the North would give a moment's credence. Driven to the corner, he declares in his late Buffalo speech that he has no expectation that the South can be relieved of the present State governments for many years to come. And yet this is what the South wants and now demands. In voting for him, the South is leaning on a broken reed, which will pierce the hand, and trusting in a rope of sand, which will part asunder on the first trial. Although Grant is the Republicans' candidate, yet the South have more to hope for from him than from any other man in the country.

The State Government.

Presumption is sometimes sublime. An illustration of this is given in the demand made by the rebels that the State government shall abdicate its functions. The infatuation which seems to characterize the unreconstructed rebel mind no where appears so strikingly as in the belief which some people have indulged in, that it is possible for a government intrusted with the high and responsible duties of inaugurating a rule of equal rights and universal freedom should basely abandon its trust merely because a political party interested in its downfall, has brought on riot and bloodshed and defies its attempts to preserve order.

Let it be borne in mind that it is in the power of the Democratic party at any moment to preserve the peace and put a stop to the riotous course of its proteges.

If it does not, the sole reason is that its leaders design to profit by the anarchy and tumult which they hope will be brought about. Let it be borne in mind that the chosen officers of the people intend to stay here and to hold and exercise the power which belongs to them.

As to all this stuff of driving out the carpet-baggers and seeing them flee, it is time that such nonsense was driven from the heads of the rebels. We, the carpet-baggers, intend to stay here. We intend to exercise our rights as freemen. One of those rights is to be eligible for and to hold any office to which the people may elect us. Another one is to express our political sentiments freely and openly.

There will be no great mob. The mobs are too cowardly and the military too formidable for that. There will be murders and assassinations. Churches and houses will be sacked. Negroes will be hunted. Yankees will be killed. These are all legitimate objects of Southern Democratic masses.

But the loss will be more theirs. Let us sum it up. A refutation which will stink in the nostrils of the civilized world. Deserted fields, abandoned wharves, blighted commerce, empty houses, broken fortunes, years upon years of ruin and neglect, and amid all this you are no nearer your goal than when you started.

These States must be reconstructed upon the basis of suffrage for all their inhabitants. No riots or mobs will ever persuade the Northern people to abandon this. They will grow tired of taxation, if you exasperate them by many more outrages on their kinsmen. But they will place the taxes on your shoulders, and arm every loyal man in your midst as a soldier for the war.

Governor Warmoth does not mean to do any thing like resigning. He will hold his place. So will all the State government. If you destroy it you will never be permitted to erect yours upon its ruins. The nation will raise up a new one.

One massacre brought the ballot to the colored man. Another one will bring the bayonet into the hands of all loyal men. We can afford to wait and to die, but not to surrender.

The Wolf and the Lamb.

Some persons who listened to the speeches last Monday evening, made to the armed mob which had beseiged the office of the Chief of Police, were forcibly reminded of this old fable.

To enable our readers to judge of the correctness of the similitude, we lay before them a brief resume of the last few days.

On the night of the 22d of September, the operations in the plan of organized and armed violence toward Republican processions began. Three or four Republican processions while peaceably passing along Canal street were fired into and dispersed, after the firing of two or three hundred shots which resulted in the killing and wounding of ten persons, mostly Republicans; and the next night a large Democratic procession filed through the principal streets. They were unmolested. Night after night the Democrats had their processions in the same manner.

In St. Marty parish, the Sheriff and Parish Judge, Republicans, are boldly assassinated in broad daylight and the murderers ride quietly off.

In Gretna a mob occurs and a negro hunt ensues. The police sent there to preserve the peace are driven away with revolvers pointed at them. On Saturday, October 24, a Republican mass meeting is held in Congo Square, armed roughs watch the entrances and threaten the participators. Two clubs on their way to the meeting are assailed on Canal street, hundreds of shots are fired but none returned, as the adjacent walls and military officers who are spectators testify. Twenty and more men are killed. The clubs dispersed, their colors taken, and that night it is unsafe for a Republican or a negro to be upon the streets. Rockets and red lights are burned; squads of men armed with revolvers and knives rush from all quarters to the scene of the mob merely to participate in the murder of fleeing and unarmed negroes. On Tuesday night following a meeting of Democrats in St. Mary's market resolve to take possession of the police station by force. A few hours afterward a quiet spectator sees small bands of armed citizens file noiselessly into Lafayette Square opposite the office of the Board of Metropolitan Police. They accumulate until a force of two or three thousand are massed there; large crowds of unorganized men follow them until the square and street are densely packed with a mob. A deputation go into the office of the Chief of Police and demand possession. The arrival of troops from General Rousseau induces leading Democrats to urge them to disperse; a movement which is accelerated by an order from a military officer informing them that if they do not disperse he has orders to disperse them. That night three Republican club rooms are sacked and gutted, several negroes are killed. The house and store of Mr. Belot, a member of the General Assembly, are sacked and thousands of dollars worth of his property destroyed.

The foregoing is a plain, unvarnished statement of facts. They show that all the violence proceeds from the Democrats, that the negroes and white Republicans are the chief sufferers; that they are always the attacked party; that they have abstained from frequent processions and meetings in their excessive desire to keep the peace; nevertheless these things occur. To-day the city is in a state of unparalleled excitement; the life of every Republican is unsafe. A cloud of latent ferociousness and brutality hovers over the streets. The Democrats and Sicilians, the thugs and roughs have been arming. It is notorious that the stores for the sale of arms and ammunition have been crowded for the last three days and that the purchasers are Democrats.

Now what say the Crescent and the Times. Listen, people of the North, and be judges.

The Crescent says:

It is entirely useless to discuss the proximate causes of the troubles which have recently taken place in this city and throughout the State. It is idle folly to debate as to the first pistol shot or the first blow. The real question is—how are we to be rescued from a condition of which pistol shots and blows, riots and conflicts, and perpetual turmoil, are the necessary accompaniments. Every sane man sees that system which has produced such a state of affairs must be defective—that it must be unsuited to the community for which it has been devised; that it is not and can not be called a civil government in any proper sense of the term. It may have been temporarily effective for the purpose of giving to the carpet-baggers and scalawags a chance to consummate their projects of plunder; but for every other purpose it is a flat failure. It can not even accomplish the main purpose for which it was invented—that of assuring the votes of the reconstructed States to the Republican party. The people of the Southern States are resolutely determined that their electoral votes shall not be cast except in accordance with their wishes, and no expedient of compulsion or of legislative legerdemain can reverse their decision. How long, then, will the Republican party insist on continuing this fatal experiment? How long will they adhere to a system which fills the land with contention and turmoil? How long will they uphold this rickety edifice of reconstruction which threatens, every moment to tumble about the ears of its architects? How long will they make themselves ridiculous by adhering to a scheme which is a demonstrated failure? Already they are responsible for every collision that has occurred, for every drop of blood that has been shed—how much more do they desire to be laid to their account?

Now the Times:

We do not think, however, that either General Rousseau or the Democratic clubs will respond very promptly to his hypocritical call. They will unite in all proper measures to maintain order and protect the lives and property of the citizens. But they will do so not by the authority of, or to afford protection to, the false, usurping, and hateful government which has been imposed on them.

There is a far better and more effectual mode of preserving peace and order, which we commend to Governor Warmoth and his associates. It is the very easy and simple process of resigning and abdicating an authority which they can not support and defend. Let them bundle up, and with their bloated carpet-bags, hie to their proper and real homes; or, if they have so great an affection for our State that they desire to remain here, let them betake themselves to some useful and honest employment in the walks of private life, and abandon forever the disgraceful business of stirring up strife and discord between the two races, which, before they came among us, lived together in harmony and good feeling.

Thus may they restore immediate peace and order to our State. To no class would such an event bring more security and contentment than our negro population. Their rights would then be guaranteed by the only people who can afford them protection, security and all their civil rights.

Now what does all this mean?

Throw aside the absurd pretense that all this arming and violence is for the protection of the armed against the unarmed and inoffensive. The purpose sticks plainly out. It is all part of an organized and well matured plot to compel the regularly constituted authorities of the State to abdicate, and if they do not to let loose the bloodhounds of riot until assassination shall have completed the vacancies so ardently desired.

It is to defeat Congressional reconstruction that the pistol and the knife are now evoked. Whatever be the result we wish to spread the facts on record that the world may judge.

We have one word, however. Governor Warmoth nor one single officer of the State will entertain for one moment a proposition to lay down the trust reposed in their hands.

It will never be done.

Reign of Terror.

We gratefully record that throughout the reign of terror, which has lasted for nearly a week, our ministers and churches have escaped injury. Some of us have been personally threatened, and one of our churches was entered, but no great damage done. Thanks to a preserving Providence: "The remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain."

The Franklin Murders and Dennett.

In the last number of the Planters' Banner, Editor Dennett, who was branded by Mrs. Pope as the cause of her husband's assassination, endeavors to wash from his hands their crimson stains. His defense occupies a column and a half of the Picayune, which paper inserts it without comment, though indorsed by a number of white citizens of the parish, some of them worthy men. When the excitements of the hour are over, these gentlemen, who from motives of a social and political character have been induced to allow such use of their names, will regret that they did not leave to this disturber of the peace the care of his own reputation, and the task of defending it.

The defense is an utter and ridiculous failure, no point is sustained; it simply charges upon the victims their own death, and justifies the assassins by the usual excuse. The Republicans were carpet-baggers, mischief makers, obnoxious strangers, and especially because Colonel Pope dared to write a letter, by request of the committee on the state of the county, appointed by the Legislature, giving his honest views as to the condition of the parish of which he was Sheriff. This letter is called slanderous, "tarnishing the fair fame of St. Mary," and yet not one of its statements are controverted. The only fault of our murdered friend and fellow his Republicans is that they claimed and exercised free speech, and labored honestly to advance the interests of their party, always conceding the same to their opponents. We invite attention to the letter in question, as published in the report of the joint committee of the General Assembly of Louisiana on the conduct of the late elections and the condition of peace and order in the State. Its substance is as follows:

"No murders have come to my knowledge, and but one case of personal violence. The present condition of the parish is bad; there appears to be a settled determination on the part of the Democratic leaders to drive out by every means in their power, all white persons who differ with them in politics. It is expressed by gross insults on the streets, misrepresentations and scurrilous abuse by the parish paper, and by threats. Efforts are made to break up the clubs, so as to control the colored vote. Known Republicans to receive the grossest personal abuse, and that in the presence of men of the first respectability."

The Colonel then instances threats against the parties renting rooms to Radical clubs, the intimidation of the District Judge, and the impediments thrown in the way of the newly elected parish officers, upon the grounds that negro votes were illegal.

Our culprit next confesses that his object was to compel "carpet-baggers" to leave the parish and "let us alone," the old secesh prayer, adding "carpet-baggers and the people of St. Mary will never live together in peace," which is modest talk in the face of two thousand Republicans to eight hundred Democratic voters, and exposes the whole Democratic scheme. The same paper is fond of saying "our negroes do very well when left undisturbed in our care."

This self-convicted slanderer of white and colored Republicans, persecutor and defamer of women, of teachers and clergymen, pretends to describe the dreadful condition of Pattersonville, Brashear, Centreville and Franklin, tells of the horrid threats of negroes and carpet-baggers, the terrible programme of the Radicals, but in no case does this brawler dare charge an act of violence upon them. The nearest he gets to a charge is that he was told that "Jack Goodwin told a truthful white man that he believed there was danger of the blacks burning the town." How contemptible! He was told that another was told that old Jack believed, etc., therefore it was right to commence murdering. Jack Falstaff was a logician in comparison. Old Goodwin was a preacher in our Church, took to whisky and wife-whipping, and being expelled, of course, became a good Democrat and good authority for his new friends. Another colored man named Watkins, once in our Church, became a defaulter, and refusing to account honestly, was expelled, he is now a good Democrat and correspondent of the Banner, in St. Landry.

We do not need to vindicate from Dennett's abuse, the characters of the Republican parish officers of St. Mary, the license of his tongue and pen is too notorious, sparing neither friend nor foe, and causing more than once his penal imprisonment. When the estimable lady, the widow of a United States officer, who, from motives of Christian benevolence, taught our colored school in Franklin, was receiving courteous treatment from the other citizens, from parish officers, tradesmen, planters, etc., this man employed his columns to slander and grossly insult a woman who had no husband or brother to avenge the infamy with a horsewhip. When the presiding elder of our church was treated with at least outward respect by others and was uninterrupted in his business and social relations while in Franklin or traveling through the parish, scarcely a number of the Banner was issued that did not contain malicious and slanderous articles, often with evident purpose to excite violence against him.

John Baldwin, an aged Christian philanthropist, founder of two universities, has been slandered and lampooned in the same columns. But the climax was reached in the bitter, infamous, murderous venom poured out upon Colonel Pope for so resolutely and skillfully fighting his way to the position to which he had been elected by the Republicans of his parish. Chivalrous men admire pluck, this man insults the brave, and says, "the smiles of his friends are his reward."

Who are his friends or those who approve his course? Not even the men who sign his certificate; some of the most prominent people in the parish irrespective of party, have often deplored to us his course, styling its landerous and incendiary, and calculated to do great harm. When the time comes they will tell him so, and unite with us in laying at his door the bloody forms of Pope and Chase.

Shreveport Massacre.

The history of political massacres has scarcely furnished one of greater brutality than that which took place in the early part of this month, at Shreveport, Louisiana. Two Arkansas planters, on returning from the town where they had been to sell their cotton, wantonly fired into the "negro quarters" at "Shady Grove Plantation," one of whom exclaimed as he fired, "I want to kill a nigger." Determining to defend themselves, the blacks seized the white men and tied them, till they could be arrested by the officers of the law. The occurrence created intense excitement and the neighboring planters rushed to the scene and released the white men. The whites then separated, resolved to kill all negroes found with arms. Seized with consternation, the poor creatures fled to the woods and swamps, while companies of them were seen down on the river bank, attired in their best garments, as if prepared for a journey or for death. As the steamer passed they looked imploringly for help, but received curses instead; yet when the steamer stopped, the whites came on board, replenished their whisky bottles and related their exploits in "killing niggers." At "Shady Grove Plantation," twenty-eight negroes were killed. At Shreveport, the levee was crowded with an excited crowd of white men, shouting and cursing in the most violent manmanner, while many crossed the river in skiffs, saying that they were going to "hunt niggers." From the deck of the steamer, the poor blacks could be seen flying to the swamps, pursued by dogs, and above the bark of the dog and the crack of the rifle could be heard the imploring cry, "Have mercy." On returning in their skiffs, the murderers were asked by their friends, "Did you get any game," and replying, said "Yes, caught one or two." Not far from the levee, the swine were seen devouring a murdered negro; another was burned to death; others were whipped till life was extinct, while forty-three were slain outright, or left in the woods to die. And during this terrible affray it was a common remark among the whites that they intended to get voting out of the negroes' heads. And this in reconstructed Louisiana!

Metropolitan Police.

No one familiar with the views and feelings of the Democrats of New Orleans suppose for a moment that they would approve the formation of a Metropolitan Police; yet, regardless of their wishes but looking to the general good of the State, the Legislature passed a law for such a police and under the provisions of the bill the present police of New Orleans has been formed. Led on by the Times, Crescent and Picayune, the Democrats have resolved to resist by force all official acts of the present force and are demanding of Mayor Conway that he shall form a new police. But let us reason together. No good lawyer will question the authority of the General Assembly to pass such a law, for in so doing our legislators have only followed the examples of New York and other leading States in the Union. To say that this police is weak is simply to say that one man can not withstand a thousand. Ordinarily the thousand are with the policeman, and hence he is strong and capable; but in this case the thousand are against him and in favor of mob law. Any police force under heaven could not protect the lives and property of this city unless aided by the law-abiding citizens. The power of any law is in the moral power which lies behind it in the community. Protect the police and the police will protect you.

The Commissioners are old citizens and well-known in this community for their intelligence and integrity. In their appointments they have displayed discrimination and wisdom, and the appointing of new men was a necessity rather than a choice. From political pressure many of the old force resigned leaving vacancies which must be filled. It is inconceivable how the Commissioners can yield to a rival force appointed by the Mayor; they would be recreant to their duty; they would thereby violate their solemn oaths; they would concede the unconstitutionality of the act, which is just what the Democrats desire. We trust the Commissioners will hold on their way; they will be triumphantly supported ere long.

Washington Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, October 22.

Prompted by a desire to view the landscape under the mellow rays of an October sun, an invitation was accepted to visit Leesburg, Virginia, thirty-six miles distant. The railroad from Alexandria passes through a section that lost nothing by the war, because there was nothing to lose, except some forest trees and some few worm fences have crawled away; these, with here and there the remains of a snaggle-tooth battery, or a government shed, are all the evidences of the war.

Leesburg is situated in a rich district of Loudon county, of which it is the capital; he town was finished at its beginning, and was then, like a young wasp, larger than it has been since; so at least it strikes one. Here, of course, the Methodist Church is divided; the old side holds the property by a compromise of the parties, and maintains some of her former position, though against great efforts; what is strange, the colored people generally attend service in the Southern church, though they are served by their own pastor of the Washington Conference. A few miles from the town, the old church has a number of churches, some jointly occupied with the South, others entirely. A reopening of old "Rehoboth" was had on Sunday, a very large church that had never before been finished, though occupied for years. The same liberty of speech and quiet possession of church property, is allowed there as in certain parts of Texas and Louisiana. Churches are burned and preachers mobbed. Not long since six ruffians followed Rev. Mr. Hicks, some distance from church, and threatened his life. A man whose size may be judged by a good medium coffee pot, he turned and denounced them as a set of cowards, the proof of which was, that six of them came to attack a man of his size; they charged him with having pistols and dirks concealed about his person, and though he did not deny it, his weapons were only a few skeletons of sermons. There is a better day in store for the old church through all that section; it only needs some proper persons to direct and sympathize with the faithful adherents of Methodism.

There was some difference traced in a few things, before and since the war, the mixture of the chalk and charcoal passengers; there seemed to be no fear that either would rub off; then again, there was no discussion of politics, not a word was heard, though the elections had just been held, the only mention of the war we heard was about a fat man who had gotten rich during it. No boast can properly be made of the condition of the railroad or speed of the steam-pony, as Dr. Johnson said of woman preaching, "it could not be well, the wonder was that it was done at all;" so with this, and even the present condition would not exist if Mr. Lewis McKenzie were not president of the company.

If this rural jaunting can be invested with any in interest, the ride will be continned to-day, though in a different direction and with less of volition. After six o'clock last night a summons was handed us from the clerk of the Comet, for Prince George's county, Maryland, to attend at Marlboro' to testify in a church suit. If the weather is at all October-like to-day, it consists in a cold, easterly wind and drizzling rain. A good team, attached to a light, comfortable carriage, brought us before the learned in the law. The case pending was a writ of ejectment from the Bladensburg Parsonage, now occupied by a preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. It was a jury case and was opened for the parties by their respective counsel; it was amusing to hear the defense travel back to the Hardan and Andrew case in 1844! The counsel for the plaintiff had clumsily brought the suit in the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church, instead of the trustees named in the deed; and was of course non-suited, as the Methodist Episcopal Church is not a corporate body. This was a most fortunate blunder for the plaintiff, for no argument, no instruction from the court could have thrust into the brains of that jury the truth in the case, but as it is the case will be brought in an appropriate shape before the court, where justice may be expected Marlboro' is situated in a district of unsurpassed fertility, about two miles from the Patuxent river. It has an unenviable history. When the great Whitfield visited it he was treated with such derision and contempt that, in the name of his Divine Master, he shook the dust from his feet, as a witness against the godless inhabitants, uttering at the same time a prophecy concerning its future religious sterrility, which is said to have been singularly fulfilled. At the end of such a ride, to such a place, with such a history, no one ought to be required to write a letter, but they have read the papers, for as we resumed our carriage at the hotel, the hangers-on paid the accustomed tribute, "there goes the carpet-baggers." Tradition tells of a traveler who, at evening entered a village, and meeting a person on the street inquired of him for the best hotel; he was told there were but two in the place, and no matter which he went to he would be sorry he had not gone to the other. Marlboro' must have set for this picture.

East Washington, Mount Kendry and Ryland churches are all sharing a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; as many as forty have been at the altar of prayer at one time.

That flag which is the symbol of all that is grand in government, floated over both houses of Congress for fifteen minutes on Friday last. The presiding officers adjourned their respective bodies till November 10.

An unusual number of Grant men have appeared in town since Tuesday of last week, but unknown before. An original poem, descriptive of the assassination of President Lincoln, has been prepared by Mr. Jamvier, of this city, and will be read here this season by Murdock. It will attract general attention, and thrill the public mind.

Troops have been sent to West Virginia to aid the civil authorities to maintain peace and order during coming times of excitement.

General Grant.

The Man the People will Vote For.

BY THE REV. B. H. NADAL, D. D.

Like the rest of the nation and the world, we have studied General Grant, and would be glad to give others the results of our thinking. The great Captain, with all his childlike simplicity and freedom from pretension, is a somewhat mysterious character. The contrast between the grandeur of his life and the modesty of his deportment utterly misleads some people, and confuses others. On his acting side he is immense; on his talking side, very small. True greatness must find expression, and when grand deeds have given it utterance, only profound natures will understand them; for the masses of men, and especially for the shallow, the hero must explain himself in words. But such an explanation is weakness; it reveals egotism, and, therefore, in the highest greatness, is well-nigh impossible. Grant will never write essays on his own campaigns, nor make speeches to illustrate the glory of his own career. Posterity must study and history understand him.

This absence of speech in Grant is hardly what men call reticence. Reticence, as usually understood, carries with it a touch of art, and is conscious of an ulterior aim. A splendid statesman may be an orator of rare eloquence, and yet may be noted for reticence. With him it is cultivated as an element of strength. He is never silent for the want of something to say. On the contrary, he holds back, and drowns, in the silence of his own mind, a thousand brilliancies, because he knows that much talk, even if fine, would make him common. Speech is his trade; it is the substance and form of his deeds; there must, therefore, be nothing little to disparage what is great, but, as it were, a field of silence, in which fine words shall be set in gorgeous clumps.

In Grant there is a reticence which is a thing of nature. It can hardly be said that he is careful about his words; but if he be, the deeper truth is that nature was careful in planning him. He never makes a striking remark, either in public or in private, in his letters or in conversation, and he can well afford to be without ambition in that direction. The disposition to shine in this sphere is a sad defect in some otherwise great men. The time spent in getting ready for a pun or a bon mot is thrown away on a littleness, and the wish to be fine in talk is itself a weakness. The absence of this in Grant has, no doubt, dampened his popularity, for the fine sayings of a public man are the windows through which the people suppose they look in upon his interior life. Many passages in Webster's speeches, and many witty sentences of Henry Clay and of President Lincoln, appear to be of this sort. They are the flowers that grow out of the fissures in the great rock, or they are the magnetism that makes the adamant attractive. In Grant, the rock is solid and bare, and the attraction is a recondite element, strongly felt only by kindred souls.

This is one reason why politicians have not been more drawn to him. Especially does this hold of many distinguished Radicals. It was not to be expected that such men as Horace Greeley and Wendell Phillips, and others of their sort, whose trade has been in sharp talk, should become enthusiastic for Grant. They had stirred up the nation with tongue and pen; their powerful eloquence clothing their honest testimony against slavery, had been in the highest degree effective, and when their talk had culminated in a successful war, they naturally sought a distinctly pronounced man for a political leader. Grant was not ready with a speech or a letter, and they looked upon him coldly. Such men have followed, not led public opinion in Grant's support.

The reticence of the great Captain extends to his appearance, as to his face, to his gait and, indeed, to his whole manner. In Sherman, a tall, wiry, mercurial man, with an unquiet face, whose every lineament is instinct with restless thought, the people see their own passions reflected, and share the wild enthusiasm before them. Sheridan, too, has an inspiring person. The popular idea paints him as a great rider, ever mounted and flying; the enemy on the wing before him; the fire in his eye; the hot blood burning in his cheeks; and the wild rallying-cry ringing from his lips—a very picture of valorous, daring, irresistible, dashing, patriotic force. The thought of him brings a hurrah into the throat. Not so Grant. His very person looks silent. Round, compact, short, his step equable and grave, his eye steady, its fire lying deeper than the crowd sees, and yet certainly there, though in the coal rather than the blaze, his forehead not high, his beard rigid, his under jaw protruding, and giving a sort of hardness to his expression, and that expression a kind of quiet, modest protest against speech—the people must fall back upon history for enthusiasm, and shout rather upon conviction and a sense of duty than from impulse.

But even in the sphere of action, we see in Grant the same reticence, the same severe self-restraint, though unconscious here as elsewhere, he so intent on one thing that the rest is ignored or perhaps utterly forgotten. Here his reticence, which may look like a defect elsewhere, becomes the minister of genuine strength—a power of concentration. It grows into a form of devotion to his country, so complete as to become almost impersonal. A striking example of this reticence in action occurred in the writer's own presence during the war. I happened, on a certain day, to be in the hall of the House of Representatives in Washington, and hearing my own name called, I turned and saw Mr. Odell, of Brooklyn. He was with General Grant, who had been summoned from the vicinity of Richmond to give testimony before the Committee on the Conduct of the War. To my great surprise, he stated that this was the first time he had ever visited the Capitol. He had been to Washington a number of times on business with the President and the War Department, but had never been in the Capitol until called there as a witness. The fact was a most singular one. The man whose fame was filling the civilized world, about whom Congress was talking by the hour, day after day, who, at that moment, was making a most wonderful epoch in history, had often been to Washington, but had never entered the Capitol until now, and even now only because called to the spot on the business of the country. This seemed to us a most striking instance of reticence in action, utter silencing of all demands of curiosity and pleasure—a power of keeping the eyes shut to all but one thing.

Another and most beautiful example of the same thing is seen in the great Captain's treatment of Sherman, when the Government found it necessary to revoke the terms given to the rebel General Johnston at the time of his surrender. Grant was dispatched to North Carolina to set aside what his brave but mistaken lieutenaant had done. He was now lifted by success into the foremost position of the world. His steady foot had just trodden out the last spark of the mightiest rebellion on record. If anything in the world could have elated him and jarred his equanimity, this must have done it. But he was perfectly serene. As he had been magnanimous toward the enemy, so now he was generous and fraternal toward his fellow-soldiers. He did, indeed, the needful thing, but hid his own hand and did it by Sherman himself. A different sort of a victor would have acted in a different spirit, and catching fire from the public indignation, or feigning to do so, would have shown his own personality in the matter, and humiliated the noble but misjudging soldier. Still another illustration of this sublime reticence in action was afforded by a personal conversation between the great Captain and the writer of this article, soon after the close of the war. Among other things said, we asked the General the question: "How did you feel during the dreadful days of the battles of the Wilderness, when your men were falling in such vast numbers, and the ground before you was contested with such stubbornness?" After a pause, the sole answer was: "I felt that we had to go to Richmond." The reply seemed to ignore philosophy, if not generalship, and yet it contained the quintessence of both philosophy and generalship. It proved that he had fixed beyond the possibility of change or of doubt, the aim and end of the campaign; that there was no provision for failure nor conception of its possibility, and that all parts of the campaign, all plans, all means were portions of the one pathway to Richmond.

That this wonderful power of self-abnegation, and of excluding from his mind all but the one great object, lay at the root of Grant's success, we do not doubt. We admit he is a military genius—one of the most daring and profound of all history. His military learning may be inferior to McClellan's, and to that of fifty others; but it is the characteristic of genius to transcend the schools, and to go straight to the mark, in ignorance or in contempt of the old paths. Without attempting to define that subtle something called genius, which hides itself in the very tissue of its own creations, in the case of Grant it is clear to us that his genius wrought in the overthrow of the rebellion by means of his power of self-restraint and concentration. The essential condition of the success of his genius was that he should resolutely shut out everything extraneous, and sink himself so deeply in his own thoughts and abide so steadily in them, that his whole plan, with the various aspects and possibilities of the situation, might become, not a transient vision, but, as it were, a picture in oil, in which he foresaw what he and we afterward saw.

This peculiar power revealed itself in other forms, quite as essential as the power itself. Every citizen knows only too well how the cause of the Union suffered, in the early part of the war, from dissensions among the chiefs of the armies. Some of the generals seemed quite as hostile to their brother officers as the rebels themselves. Many a battle was lost by this contemptible littleness. No chief had as yet appeared whose genius was commanding or whose spirit was assimilating. A man was wanting large enough to see that one brain, however grand, was not sufficient for the terrible emergency; a man with insight into men sufficient to enable him to make the best selection of commanders; a man not afraid to choose the best, when they were found, lest they should be rivals; and, in a word, a man generous enouuh, and magnetic enough, and powerful enough to fuse into unity with himself, and around himself, and with one another, the commanders so selected. Grant precisely met this want. He harmonized and united the military intellect of the nation. Under him and Sherman, and Thomas and Sheridan, and their numerous and able subordinates, the campaign became one. Grant gave the outline—his mind and heart inspired it—but generous and confiding scope was given to the individuality of each of his lieutenants. Between him and his chief captains, history records no shadow of jealousy, no moment even of coldness. He found the heads of the army in a deadly wrangle; and made them a harmonious family; and, to this day, he and Sherman and Thomas and Sheridan are united like Damon and Pythias. As their fame is one, so their hearts are one.

During their campaign, there came a time when Grant was compelled to lie inactive before Richmond, and his patience was even more wonderful than his successes. There he sat during the long winter, and the nation watched asd waited in breathless suspense. To many he seemed to have reached the end of his string, and to be doing nothing but smoke. Sherman was marching from Tennessee to the ocean. Atlanta, Savannah, Charleston fell: the world resounded with Sherman's renown. He was said to be greater than Grant. Thomas was winning laurels in the West, and Sheridan was appropriating the hearts of the people by his exploits in the valley of the Shenandoah. What a terrible thing it is to an ambitious soldier to be forgotten! to stand on the loftiest eminence of command, and yet see his laurels gliding, in popular estimation, from his own brow to those of his lieutenants! There are generals we know of, who, in Grant's position at that time, would have gone stark mad. They would have rushed down South and snatched the reins of the war-chariot from Sherman, or taken possession of Sheridan's charger in the Valley, or of Thomas's position in the West, or all three by turns, so as to have their names in print, and keep in advance of their too aspiring and too successful subordinates. But there sat Grant before Richmond, not green or livid with jealousy, but radiant with joy. Sherman and Sheridan and Thomas were his own boys; their victories belonged to the firm, and the grateful praises of the people, falling on the heads of his generals, were beautifully completed by those of the man sitting idle before Richmond. But the great Captain was in at the death. Appomattox, with Grant presiding, finished the rising climax of victories, and the long-pursued game fell at last into the bag of the chief hunter.

The war has now been over for several years, and Grant, the sort of stuff out of whom the Old World civilizations make emperors and autocrats, still continues one of the most modest and simple of men. Indeed, it might be doubted whether a thorough examination of our whole population would not result in declaring Grant to be the most notable example of modesty in the nation.

And now, deficient as Grant may be in the lighter elements of popularity, it is clear that he possesses all the nobler and profounder attributes of strength. If his words have only in a few instances passed into the talk of the people, his great deeds have slowly but certainly reached and mastered their hearts and their judgment. The qualities that made him the great soldier of the age, that united the jarring elemetns of military rule, are such as fit men wisely and calmly to lead and to govern in any and every sphere of public life.

A SMALL BOY'S COMPOSITION.—Corns are of all kinds. Vegetable and animal. Vegetable corn grows in rows and animal corns grows on toes. There are several kinds of corn: there is unicorn, capricorn, corn-dodgers, field corn and toe corn, which is the corn you feel most. It is said, I believe, that gophers like corn; but persons having corns do not like to "go far," if they can help it. Corn have kernels, and some colonels have corns. Vegetable corn grows on ears, but animal corn grows on the feet at the other end of the body. Another kind of corn is acorn; these grow on oaks but there is a hoax about the corn. The acorn is a corn with an indefinite article, but the corn is very definite indeed. Try it and see. Many a man when he has a corn, wishes it was an acorn.

Folks that have corns some times send for a doctor, and if the doctor himself is corned, he would probably do as well as if he isn't. The doctors say corns are produced by tight boots or shoes, which is probably the reason why when a man is tight they say he is corned. If a farmer manages well he can get a good deal of corn on one acre, but I know a farmer that has corn that makes the biggest acher on his farm. The bigger crop of vegetable corn a man raises the better he likes it, but the bigger crop of animal corn he raises the better he does not like it. Another kind of corn is corn-dodger. The way it is made is very simple, and is as follows (that is if you want to know): You go along the street and meet a man you know has a corn, and is a rough character, then you step on the toe that you know has the corn on it, and see if you don't have occasion to doge. In that case you will find out what a corn-dodger is.

AN OLD MAN'S STORY—"I took the pledge," said an old man, "at the foot of the gallows, when I saw a young man hung. The Sheriff took out his watch, and said, 'If you have any thing to say speak now, for you have only five minutes to live.' The young man burst into tears and said: 'I have to die. I had only one little brother; he had beautiful blue eyes and flaxen hair, and I loved him. But one day I got drunk, and coming home, found him gathering berries in the garden; and I became angry without a cause, and killed him with one blow with a rake. Whisky has done it—it has ruined me. I have but one word more to say—never! never! never! touch any thing that can intoxicate.'"

A certain deacon, on occasions of missionary collections, was wont to shut his eyes and sing, "Fly abroad, thou mighty Gospel," with such an earnestness and unction that he would quite forget to see the plate as it came around. "O, yes," said the plate-bearer, "but just you give something to make it fly."

An invalid disturbed all the inmates of his boarding house up town recently, by imitating a dog. When asked why he did it, he said he had been ordered by his physician to take port wine and bark.

THE LEGISLATURE

the time of the burning of that boat, and nobly remained at his post of duty and sacrificed his own life in order to save the lives of passengers; that even when advised by brother officers to "leave the wheel; you can do no good," he heroically declared his intention to remain until the boat struck the bank, and it became too late for him to escape the devouring flames.

Your committee believe that such self sacrificing devotion deserves recognition from the State, and that the encouragement of a similar spirit among those engaged in river navigation (who form so numerous and respectable an element of our population), will prove the best guarantee of safety to travelers which can possibly be devised.

Respectfully.

JOURNAL OF THE SENATE.

Forty-Fifth Day's Session.

THURSDAY, August 20, 1868.

The Senate was called to order by the President at eleven o'clock.

The roll was called, the following members present:

Anderson, Beares, Darrall, Day, Egan, François, Lewis, Offutt, Packard, Pollard, Ray, Smith, Thompson, Todd, White, Whitney, Wilcox, Williams, Wittgenstein—19.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Mr. Turner.

Mr. Ray: I move that the reading of the minutes be dispensed with.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. Ray, from the Judiciary Committee, and from the Committee on Internal Improvements, and Mr. Wittgenstein, from the Committee on Visiting the Penitentiary, reported progress.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives appeared with a message from the House requesting the Senate to return House bill No. 89, an act establishing a uniformed militia for the State, etc., as the House had discharged the joint committee on the part of that body appointed to consider such matters.

Mr. Bacon: I move that the bill be returned to the House.

Adopted.

MOTIONS.

The President: Motions being in order, I place before the Senate a communication received from the Mayor and Board of Aldermen of this city.

The communication from the city authorities was read, as follows:

WHEREAS, An act entitled an act to establish a Metropolitan police district, and provide for the government thereof is now before the General Assembly of Louisiana; and,

Whereas, The said act constitutes as one district, to be known as the Metropolitan Police District, the cities of New Orleans, Jefferson, and Carrollton, and the towns of Algiers and Gretna; and,

Whereas, The police force is by said act greatly increased, and the Mayors of New Orleans, Jefferson, and Carrollton, and the Police Juries of Algiers and Gretna are required to furnish additional offices, stations, lockups, houses of detention, furniture, equipments, accommodations, etc., for the Board, officers, and members of the said police; and,

Whereas, Said act levies upon the estates, real and personal, of the above said cities and towns a tax to carry out the provisions of said act, which at this time will be a heavy burden upon the people; and, whereas, said act is a direct encroachment upon the liberty of the people, punishing misdemeanors as penitentiary offenses, authorizing policemen to make arrests for trivialities, and rendering insecure the personal liberty of the good people of New Orleans, and adjacent cities and towns included in the metropolitan district; and

Whereas, Events have occurred which have already demonstrated the impropriety and insecurity arising from the act taking from the Mayor of New Orleans all control of the Chief and members of the police force; and,

Whereas, There can be no doubt that the police force fixed by the present laws is amply sufficient in point of numbers to protect persons and property, and therefore the contemplated increase is unnecessary, and in the unfortunate financial condition of the city unwarranted; therefore,

Be it resolved, That a joint committee, composed of two from the Board of Aldermen and three from the Board of Assistant Aldermen, be appointed by the Presidents of the Boards of Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen to wait upon the Governor and the Committees of the Legislature on Corporations and Parochial Affairs and present our solemn protest against the aforesaid act to establish a metropolitan police district, and to provide for the governmant thereof, said act being highly detrimental to the public interest, and if enforced would be productive of incalculable mischief and, perhaps, deplorable results.

Be it resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the Mayor to the Governor, President of the Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives, of the General Assembly of Louisiana, and to the committees aforesaid.

(Signed) THOS. H. SHIELDS,
President of the Board of Aldermen pro tem.,

REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

The Committee on Elections and Qualifications submitted the following report, which was received and accepted:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Rooms of Committee on Elections and Qualifications, New Orleans, August 19, 1868.

To Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Elections and Qualifications, respectfully represent to your honorable body that they have examined the evidence in the contestation of P. F. Valfroit vs. J. Milton Morris, and Frederick Fobb vs. G. H. Hill, Representatives for the parish of Ascension, and find the protests and evidence insufficient in all respects to justify the contestants obtaining the seats as demanded; said protests and evidence having been presented in a spirit of captiousness.

And we therefore recommend that Messrs. J. Milton Morris and G. H. Hill be confirmed in their seats as members of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana.

P. JONES YORKE,
Chairman;
F. C. ANTOINE,
DENNIS BURREL,
MORTIMER CARR,
HARRY LOTT,
JAMES McCULLEN.

The Committee on Claims submitted the following report, which was received and accepted:

To the Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana:

Your Committee on claims beg leave to submit a favorable report in relation to the petition of Benjamin Weil for an appropriation by the Legislature to pay fifteen certificates of the indebtedness of the State of Louisiana, amounting to the sum of one hundred and forty thousand eight hundred and ninety-four dollars and thirty-two cents ($140,894 32), for the following reasons:

1. That it has been shown by direct testimony that the said Benjamin Weil did actually furnish goods to the State to a much larger amount than certificates were issued for, and that the said goods were received by the State, and used solely for the benefit and relief of the destitute and suffering citizens of the State, and that the State has never paid for the same in whole or in part, and is therefore justly indebted for them.

2. That the Auditor of Public Accounts, after cutting down the amount claimed by Benjamin Weil from one hundred and eighty-six thousand and odd dollars to one hundred and forty thousand eight hundred and ninety-four dollars and thirty-two cents, did on the twenty-eighth of November, 1866, settle the said claim of Benjamin Weil and issued fifteen certificates of the indebtedness of the State of Louisiana therefor, which were duly approved by J. Madison Wells, as Governor, and which the petitioner now prays an appropriation to pay.

3. That by the laws of Louisiana now in force (see page 28, section 16 of the revised statutes, and article 149 of the Constitution) the claim is a legal one against the State of Louisiana. Your Committee therefore recommend the passage of the following act:

J. H. McVEAN,
Chairman of Committee;
S. E. CUNY,
JOHN GARTSKAMP,
P. JONES YORKE,
W. POPE NOBLE.

[The publication of the act is omitted.]

On motion of Mr. Morey, of Ouachita, the rules were suspended and the bill went through its second reading.

On motion of Mr. Morey, of Ouachita, the consideration of the bill was postponed until Monday next in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Judiciary submitted the following report, which was received, accepted and the bill therein reported ordered to be engrossed:

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE ROOM, August 19, 1868.

To the Honorable Speaker and House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN—Your Committee on Judiciary beg leave to report favorably on House bill No. 112, herewith returned, an act to amend an act entitled an act to transfer all the causes now pending before the courts of the State under the Constitution of 1864 to the courts created by the Constitution of 1868.

P. HARPER,
Chairman.

The Committee on Corporations submitted the following report, which was received and accepted:

NEW ORLEANS, August 19, 1868.

To the Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee have the honor to submit the following report on House bill No. 118:

You committee have visited the City Hall and made diligent inquiry relative to the necessity for the appointment of license inspectors as contemplated by the bill referred to, and are of the opinion that the appointment of such inspectors would only entail unnecessary expense upon the city, which at this time can ill afford to pay salaries to any more officers than are absolutely required.

The City Treasurer employes four license inspectors to see that avery one pays his license tax, and these are amply sufficient. The City Attorney, also, at his own expense, employs several persons to assist him in finding out those who have not paid their license taxes. As the City Attorney receives a large per cent (five per cent) on all license taxes collected by him, it is but reasonable to presume that his own interest, if no other motive, would have a great influence in making him attend to this part of his duty.

In addition to the reasons above given the compensation proposed in this bill is altogether too much, as it will be seen that it proposes to give to these license inspectors ten per cent upon all licenses collected, an amount just double that which the City Attorney receives for his services.

We therefore report unfavorably upon the bill.

W. L. McMILLEN,
Chairman;
JOHN PAGE,
C. RODNEY MAY,
CHAS. LEROY,
CANNON J. ADOLPHE.

The same committee reported back favorably House bill No. 81, joint resolution appointing a joint committee to investigate the actions of the First and Second Drainage Commissioners.

Bill ordered to be engrossed.

Same committee reported House bill No. 139, recommending that action be deferred until the joint committee provided for by House bill No. 81 make their report.

The Committee on Claims submitted the following report, which was received and accepted:

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the House of Represenatives of Louisiana:

Your Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Captain D. E. Haynes, respectfully report as follows:

That during the military operations under General Banks along the Red river in 1864 a large number of Union men were enlisted in the United States army, and performed good service to the Government. The petitioner claims to have raised a company of scouts, under order of Major General Banks, and on the promise of Lieutenant Governor Wells that each scout should receive from the State a bounty of three hundred dollars. What right Lieutenant Governor Wells had to make such promises is not shown, nor is it proven to the committee that he made such promises. Nevertheless, that the Union soldiers of Louisiana did excellent service to the country, and deserve some recognition from the Government, can not be denied. On the seventh of October, 1864, Governor Hahn, in a message to the Legislature, alluded to the patriotic services of these men in the following manner:

"Your special attention is required on the matter of rendering assistance to the families of Louisiana soldiers in the army of the United States. Both the honor and welfare of the State urge you to the consideration of this subject. The Louisiana volunteers entered the army of the United States solely for patriotic motives. They were not tempted to enlist by the offer of large bounties, nor had they the certainty, as did the soldiers of other States, that while they were away from their homes fighting for their country those who were dependent on them would be succored and cared for by the generosity of the State. The conduct of the Louisiana regiments for fortitude in the field, for faithful toil and patient endurance in post and camp needs no encomium from me. The various scenes of struggle which memorialize the campaigns of the Teche, the seige of Port Hudson and the expedition to the Red river all attest that for gallantry of conduct, for conspicuous bravery, the foot and cavalry of Louisiana, if they had many equals had no superiors for devotion to the sacred cause, or the honorable performance of duty. The families of many of these brave men have suffered for the necessaries of life. And I entreat you let it be among the earliest acts of your bodies to make such appropriations of money that it can no longer be said that the wives and children of the soldiers of Louisiana are in want while the State has a dollar left in her treasury."

Your committee regret that the present impoverished condition of the State treasury and the multitude of other important and pressing matters requiring the attention of the Legislature at this first session under the Constitution of 1868, will not allow them and the Legislature to act on the subject of Captain Haynes's memorial promptly and intelligently. At the next session when our financial position and ability to grant bounties shall be better understood and sufficient time shall have been allowed us to frame a bill for the relief of all the loyal soldiers of Louisiana or their families, and when the Legislature shall, with the aid of an Adjutant General sympathizing with such a movement, have all the documents and information which the importance of the subject demands, a bill can be framed which will doubtless do justice to all the brave men of the State who served their country in the hour of danger.

The committee are anxious to extend aid to persons of the class described in the memorial of Captain Haynes, but under article No. 124 of the Constitution, our first duty is to provide an annual pension for the veterans of 1814 and 1815. This has not yet been done, but bills are now pending to meet this constitutional requirement. Under all the circumstances, your committee feel constrained to report that no satisfactory bill on the subject referred to them can be framed and adopted at this session of the Legislature, and that the subject will engage their earliest and most serious attention at the next session.

Respectfully submitted,

J. H. McVEAN,
P. JONES YORKE.
S. E. CUNY.

SEC. 8. Be it further enacted, etc., That should the applicant for registry have been born without the limits of the United States, and afterward became a citizen thereof, other than by naturalization in the courts, then he shall make affidavit and set forth the circumstances whereby he became a citizen, such as the naturalization of his father, or by his residence in any State or territory when the same was acquired or ceded to the United States, or any other manner whereby, under the laws of the United States he would become a citizen thereof: Provided, That affidavits authorized to be made by this act may be sworn to before the Supervisors, but in no case, or under any circumstances, shall the Supervisors make any charge, or demand any fee, under penalty of removal from office.

THE GERMANIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, established in 1860, and based upon the most approved principles of Life Insurance security, presents its claims for consideration, believing that its solid foundation already secured by the faithful and efficient management of its officers and Board of Directors will give it the preference above all other similar institutions.

It is purely mutual, as the net profits are distributed among the parties insured, the interest of the capital stock being only five per cent according to its charter.

It assumed the system of cash payments at the commencement of its existence, and maintained it faithfully until now, and promises the same for the future, thereby securing to policy holders the full amount for which they are insured. The advantage of this system over the half cash and half note system is patent to every careful observer, but will be more fully illustrated by the following statement and table:

If a person of thirty years of age insures his life for the amount of $1000 in one of the credit companies, and pays a premium of $28 30 per year, with a note for half of the premium, then by means of this note and interests thereon the amount will become less and less in the following proportions:

|---|---|
| After 10 years the $1000 will amount to | $887 44 |
| After 15 years the $1000 will amount to | 795 28 |
| After 20 years the $1000 will amount to | 666 02 |
| After 25 years the $1000 will amount to | 484 73 |
| After 30 years the $1000 will amount to | 230 47 |
| After 33 years the $1000 will amount to | 32 53 |
| After 34 years the $1000 will amount to | Nothing. |

So that after a lapse of 34 years the whole amount will be eaten up, notwithstanding the parties insured paid their money in good faith.

The large dividend of 40 per cent declared last January is evidence of the care and success with which the Managers have conducted the enlarged and rapidly increasing interests of the Company, and vouches for its future brilliant and permanent prosperity.

Parties contemplating an assurance on their lives will do well to examine the status of this Company, every facility for which will be given by the

The doctor prescribed, as an experiment—what had been suggested by Dr. O. W. Holmes on his late visit—"Jonas Whitcomb's Remedy for Asthma," a teaspoonful in a wineglass of water, to be taken every four hours. A good night was the result.

In no case of purely Asthmatic character has it failed to give prompt relief, and in many cases a permanent cure has been effected. No danger need be apprehended from its use. An infant may take it with perfect safety.

[From the Christian Freeman.]

LIFE'S TWILIGHT:
Or, The Chambers of Memory.

I musingly sit in life's twilight, alone,
For the days of its sunshine have pass'd,
And think of the loved who are scattered and strewn,
Like the leaves by the chill, wintry blast.
There are whispers that waken the long buried years,
Revealing the marks folly made;
There are voices whose echoes return to our ears;
They come in my twilight's still shade!

They open the chambers of memory wide,
And many a cell they disclose,
Where the altars I reared in my youthful pride,
In freshness and beauty arose.
But time, as it passed, has those altars o'erthrown,
And fancy has taken its flight;
While away in their brightness the visions have flown,
That filled my young heart with delight.

In those chambers I meet with my loved ones again,
In their beauty and youth, as of yore;
Nor would I recall them to sorrow and pain,
But rejoice that they'll taste them no more.
I see them again in their life's early prime,
Ere a brow had been furrowed with care;
I feel that they've gone to a far brighter clime,
And almost I long to be there.

In those dusky chambers a mirror of truth,
That was bleared by my noonday glare,
Reveals in my twilight the errors of youth,
And portrays each deceptive snare.
There are pictures of sorrow and pictures of joy,
O's the walls of those chambers so dim,
And I've learned that life's gold, without fitting alloy,
Is not good in this dark world of sin.

There are spots on those walls, oh, could I efface!
Soon these tears would remove every stain—
There's a power goes forth from each dark'ning trace:
When life is no more 'twill remain—
Will remain when this aching head is at rest,
And the hand which indites is no more;
When lowly reposes this sorrowing breast,
It will shadow eternity,s shore.

I sit in life's twilight—I linger alone,
And mournfully gaze on the past;
The shadows still deepen—my day-dreams have flown,
And what is there left me at last?
Ah! what? though in weakness and tears still I cling
To the faith that I cherished in youth—
Press closer its shield to my heart while I sing,
And tighten the girdle of truth.

Then onward, and upward I raise mine eyes,
For my twilight grows brighter to me,
And ev'ning's sweet star is illuming my skies
And it gilds them all gloriously.
'Tis "Bethlehem's Star" which enlivens the gloom,
And chases the shadows away;
It soothes all my terrors while nearing the tomb,
And guides lest I wander astray.

It heralds the dawn on a happier shore,
Where youth all immortal is found—
Where sorrow and care will perplex us no more,
But rivers of pleasure abound.
Alone in life's twilight I'm lingering still,
But I trust in my Father above—
My hope is confirmed and I wait for His will,
Assured of His mercy and love.

Planchette.

BY E. STUART PHELPS.

Fifteen years ago somebody in Germany happened to hold a pencil at arm's length in a pair of scissors, and observed that, owing either to the tremulousness of the hand, or to the vividness of the imagination, or to causes unknown, intelligent words traced themselves upon paper.

This was a crude Planchette. In 1860 or 1861 a novel was published in England with the title of "Who Breaks Pays." On searching this volume the curious reader will meet with a young lady who beguiles her "weary hours" with a very well described Planchette.

In the winter of 1867–8 the uncanny looking word sprang into very black advertisements in our American cities; and to-day a counter without Planchette is a fossil. The trundle in the windows of the tract house and tobacco stores, dance among opera scores and Sunday school books—heart-shaped planchettes, square planchettes, planchettes for eight dollars and planchettes for fifty cents, planchettes of walnut, ash, mohagany, gutta percha, tin, glass—planchettes on pegs, coils and pentagraph wheels. Planchette confronts you at the dancing parties and in the minister's study, in the drawing-room and the "social circle"—and the end thereof who can foretell!

Like most discoveries, it is eminently simple. Why did nobody ever think to stick a pencil through a little board before?

It is said that the patentee, whose claim dates back to 1861, has not dared hitherto, to bring the thing to light; fearing that the public would label it Spiritualism and run away from it.

A word for the benefit of the uninitiated as to the use of the toy. Old "mediums" may skip the next paragraph.

The tips of your fingers are placed very lightly upon it, the elbows raised from the table. Two pairs of hands are better than one. Few people can operate fluently alone. It has been noticed that when the hands are very heavy, either from natural weight or from weariness, each operator may use one with better effect. About five persons in eight are able to control Planchette. It may move for you at once, or it may stand like Atlas before your patient eyes for half an hour. When the board is thoroughly charged it trembles, clicks a little, slides away under your hands, hesitates, stops, tries again; warms with the subject, darts to and fro across the paper rapidly, traces embroidery patterns and crowsfeet, and whirls about in great circles, which seriously threaten the equilibrium of your elbow joints. In this mood ply Planchette with questions. Your experience will not be unlike this:

"Will it rain to-morrow?"

Planchette — "Yes." (Distinctly written, with no muscular action of your own.)

To-morrow dawns without a cloud, but you do not know that yet, and trustfully proceed.

"Of whom am I thinking?"

Planchette—"Bevelina Bangs."

You are thinking of Miss Bangs, and you know it, and so does every body else, when, blushing up to your hair and down to your neck-tie, you hastily resign your position, and content yourself with interrogating Planchette through another operator.

You ask in silence, "Who will preach in King's Chapel the first Sabbath in next December?"

Planchette scribbles over half a sheet of paper with copy-book ms, has fits of reflections, has spasms of hope, struggles to write, but writes nothing.

Aloud—"Who will preach in King's Chapel next winter?"

Planchette (promptly)—"Belzebub."

In view of this novel prospect, question the operators closely. The chances are that one or both of them had the word in mind.

Try once more. "What is the number of my watch?" (silently.)

Planchette falls to dancing a polka, but deigns no reply.

"Planchette," aloud, "what is the number of my watch?"

Planchette—"17,861."

The number of your watch is 4580, but across the room, in the corner, sits a lady whose watch numbers 17,861.

Again. "Planchette, draw a picture of the next President of the United States."

Planchette immediately draws a man with a cigar in his mouth—not so artistically as might be, but still it is a man with a cigar.

A pretty young author in the company ventures timidly:

"How many copies of my book, "The Creaking Hinge," will sell this autumn?"

Planchette—"Twenty."

"Planchette," this from the incredulous man of a philosophic turn of mind, "how long shall I live?"

Planchette (confidently.)—"Yes."

Incredulous Philosopher with decision—"When shall I die?"

Planchette—"Never."

Four Planchette parties out of five will not accomplish any thing more important or more mysterious than this. The fifth will make prophecies, some of which will verify themselves—write the signatures of absent men in their own hand, tell the most secret thoughts of persons whose touch is not upon the board, write in any language known to the operator, and witness the board dancing to a whistled tune.

Occasionally, after becoming au fait at Planchette, an operator will find that a simple pencil answers his purpose as well. He holds it out with uprised arm—it writes easily and at once. He may rest his entire arm and hand heavily upon the table, to convimself that he is not cheating—but the arm slides, the hand moves, the pencil intelligently follows his spoken or unspoken thought. Nervous or superstitious people, however, are hereby advised to let this experiment alone. It is not in all respects desirable to be in the condition of the young lady whose needle book deliberately walked out of her work-basket one evening after she had been devoting herself to Planchette. That story, by the way, comes on "very good authority." I did not see that needle-book; I never saw King Theodore. Do I believe it? Ask Planchette.

What is this mysterious plaything? Ask it. It will tell you, Lucifer. But, waiving that pleasant hypothesis for the present, what is the power which makes a piece of wood fly under your passive hands, and carry on intelligent conversations without your voluntary influence?

"Animal magnetism," says the gentleman who knows. "Electricity," pronounces the professor in spectacles. "Humbug," sneers the D. D., who is too busy to test the matter. "Spirits," falters the young lady with the needle-book.

Magnetism it may be, but who is the wiser for that? What do we know of magnetism that should explain a lead pencil's reading the mind of a person at room's width? Electricity it may be, but how can electricity move a solid and very heavy glass machine? What has electricity to do with the insulated Planchette on non-conducting glass pegs? Humbug it may be, but what then of the "value of testimony," reverend sir? Spirits it may be, but we lack "the evidence on't."

Theories fail before this simple toy, opinions balk, experience defies itself. One expert never controls Planchette till he is weary. Another loses his power with his freshness. An amateur likes wet weather for Planchette. The next is powerless in a storm. "Children operate most successfully," says one dealer; "the power does not lie in the soul or nerves." The "best mediums," you hear across the street, "are highly nervous people." Watch the next party which you meet around Planchette. A man without a fancy, stout, strong, well, calm, and his sick, nervous, emaciated, morbid wife are equally successful.

One thing, however, seems to be certain. The power which possesses Planchette is identical with the power of table-tipping. Another thing is probable, that it is akin to the power of the spiritualistic medium.

Mrs. Smith, clairvoyant, any where on Washington street—an absolute stranger to you and yours—will, for the sum of one dollar, write for you with the finger of one hand upon the palm of another, your own name, business, age, past history and future prospects, the names of your dead friends, the disease of which they died, together with as many aimless, uncharacteristic messages from them as you choose to sit and listen to.

Does she, under a law of physical condition which we have not fathomed, read your mind? Does Planchette, under the same law interpret your thought or your neighbor's? Have we not here the hints of a problem which belongs not to superstition, but to science? Is not the time coming, and now at hand, when this whole series of phenomena will awaken no more surprise than the transmission of this sentence from my brain to the Watchman and Reflector.

Then the devil has nothing to do with it? He would be a bold theorizer who should assert that. The devil has to do with most things in this world. How far he is allowed to wrench any simple law from its system we can not tell. Whether Planchette and Mrs. Smith are peculiarly open to his influence remains to be proved.

Fallacies of Love.

Love holds in our imaginative literature a position which it does not hold in life. We should suppose, if we read only novels and poetry, that the one thing interesting in life is the relation of the sexes, and all the little anxieties of pairing. Our literature seems to draw its inspirstion from but this one passion. All other passions and interests are as nothing compared with the passion of love, and the subsidiary emotions which it evokes. Yet is there anything more true than Byron's celebrated saying, in which he compares the parts which love plays in the lives of men and of women—that it is of man's existence but a part? The part is treated as if it were the whole, and we are glutted with fictions which, professing to represent human nature to the life, and which do, indeed, contain a great deal of truth, are utterly one-sided. They commit the gigantic error of picturing the human race as engaged from year's end to year's end in the pursuit of one absorbing interest—that of love. We boast of the truthfulness of our novels; and, if we take any one for special examination, we may say of it, that it contains a fair enough view of certain characters. But put aside individual tales — look at modern fiction as a whole—think of all the subjects it dilates upon—regard them in the mass—see how the children of men appear in the litarary imaginations to have but one dream and one life—and then say whether the sum of life, as it appears in romance, bears any resemblance to life as it appears in fact.

"Oh Love, love, love!
Love is like a dizziness,
It winna let a body
Gang aboot his business."

So sings the Ettrick Shepherd; and what he says of the action of love in the heart, is certainly true of love in its action on romances. All the people in the world of novels are so dizzy with love, that they are unable to go on with the real business of life; we do not see them sufficiently as the world sees them, engaged in their daily work, pursuing their several ends, and living a multifarious life, of which love is but one of the elements, and an element for the most part hidden out of sight.

From constantly dwelling on the hopes and fears of love, and all the fluctuations and enchantments of the passion, there follow, inevitably, certain modes of treating it which are open to question. In our day, what, perhaps, is most evident, is that the theme of love has been so exhausted, that novelists are at their wits' end to find some new way of exhibiting its vagaries. We are so oppressed with the monotony of love as it shows in fiction—we know all its ways so well—how the courtship begins, how it goes on, how it ends in marriage bells—that we seek hard for some new phases of it to exhibit. We are taught the grandeur of masculine love that it kneels down to the beggar-girl in her squalor; it teaches us the refinement of feminine love that it bolts to perdition with a groom. Love is made to bridge over the most improbable chasms, to gild the most amazing infamy. There is no villainy, however execrable, no abomination, however loathsome, which is not supposed to be hallowed if it should seem to find a motive in love, albeit basa.

These, however, are but the extravagances of novelists who are forced to invent some novelty regarding a passion which cloys us in literature with a monotony of sweetness. It is more common to find in the literature of love extravagances of a different kind—fine falsities that have accomplished infinite sorrow and mischief through their reaction upon life. Few doctrines are more baneful in their influence on modern society than the theory of the uncontrollable character of love, which has taken possession of our literature. Love being the supreme passion of modern art in all its phases, it became necessary to sound high the praises of this, which is represented as playing a part so important in human life. Above all things we must do homage to its strength. It may be fine or coarse of texture—but if it be true love, it is important for the purpose of novelists and poets to insist on its irresistible power. The theory is in the first place that love cannot be evaded—that there is a destiny in it—that, as the saying is, you fall into it, or that you are smitten with it as with a disease—in a word, that you cannot help yourself; and in the second place that, once fallen, you cannot escape; that once smitten, you are incurable. The effect of this theory upon life is often painful. We learn to like some one of the opposite sex; we fancy ourselves in love, and we make no attempt to control what we know to be uncontrollable. So the passion flourishes on the reputation of its despotism. All men are not such fools as thus to yield to it; but there are quite enough of both men and women who submit to the passion on the faintest sign of its approach, and make themselves miserable for life because they have an extravagant notion of what love is, and think that their fate is not to be eschewed.

It is the greatest mistake in the world to suppose that love is not subject to control. Why do we not fall in love with our sisters? Simply because we know that we must not, and ought not. Perhaps you may be inclined to give me a different answer, saying, because they are our sisters. But this answer in reality means the same as the other, although people seem to imagine that it means something different. They seem to imply that there is the same impossibility of falling in love with a sister as there is to become enamored of a female belonging to a different species. There is no such impossibility. Men have frequently become enamored of women of whose consanguinity they were ignorant. The reason you do not entertain a passion for your sister is, not because they are your sisters, but because you know that they are—because they and you from infancy have been trained never to think of each other in the light of lovers—because, if ever you are struck with your sister's beauty, it never occurs to you that you can call this beauty yours—because, in short, you know from the moment you can entertain a thought of love, that the passion, as regards your sister, is hopeless, useless, vain, wicked—that it can and must be controlled. Or take another case. How is it that we do not fall in love with women who are out of our own sphere of life? A man sees a princess whom, if she were of his own plebeian rank, he might covet for his bride. He can not help admiring her, but does he think of her with love? and, if he does not think of her with love, why not but for this cause, that the knowledge of her rank exerts over his emotion an unconscious control? So that it is nearly as impossible for a commoner to fall in love with a princess as to fall in love with his own sister. The conclusion to be drawn from which is, that since the passion of love is thus shown to be capable of control in certain cases, there can be no reason to suppose that it is not controllable in all. To teach otherwise is only to propagate a mischievous fallacy. It may not always be controllable if we allow it to take possession of our minds; but it is always so if we choose to be on our guard against its approaches.

Related to this is another fallacy which the novelists are fond of setting forth, and which tends to much unhappiness. It is that true love never comes but once. The love which the romancers glorify is that which is known as first love. It is a sensation which we are supposed to feel but once in our lives for one person. The object, it will be perceived, is to invest true love with all possible glory, and so we are taught to believe that, unlike every other passion of the soul, it blazes forth but once. The fallacy here is not so hurtful as in the former case, where the glory of love is exaggerated. Far be it from me to disparage a great love. Let us admit even that in process of time it may become irresistible. But I do not think that I cast a doubt on the existence of noble love and of consuming passion, because I venture to insist that, at least in its inception, all love is capable of control, and that the romancers who announce another doctrine sow the seeds of sorrow in many a life. But the fallacy I am now noting tends in another direction, to the contempt of all attachment which is not what is called first love. A recent poet has made mirth of the fallacy in verses which, if we are to take them seriously, err in the opposite direction:—

First love is a pretty romance,
But not half so sweet as is reckoned;
And when one awakes from the trance,
There's a vast stock of bliss in a second.

And e'en should a second subside,
A lover should never despair;
The world is uncommonly wide,
And the women uncommonly fair.

The poets their raptures may tell,
Who have never been put to the test;
A first love is all very well,
But, believe me, the last love's the best.

No doubt these verses, in all their reckless gayety are a little too suggestive of light-o'-love. In all true passion there is a stability which opposes itself to change. But this is not to say that change is impossible, and that a second attachment must always be inferior to the first. Think of all the jealousy and mistrust that must rise out of such a theory. I sometimes read the answers to correspondents in which the penny weekly journals indulge, and I am amused to see with what persistence and earnestness their editors preach to Mary Anne and Eleanor, who address them from the servants' hall, and from unknown backshops, that they can never love but once, and that their sweethearts, however ardent in their professions, are of doubtful character if they have ever been mated or have ever gone courting before. But if there be something amusing in the high-flown theory of love which these editors set before the uneducated and half-educated classes for whom they cater, surely also misery comes of it in the mistrust which it engenders.

What else are we to expect when modern literature and art are inspired by one passion, to the exclusion well nigh of all else in human life? Our regard for this one passion and all that belongs to it becomes morbid; we learn to judge of it untruly; we attend to its promptings with the most absurd expectations; and, seeing the misery which it works in modern Europe through the exaggerations of romance, a man inclined to gloom might not without reason doubt whether the emotion which, as the strongest bond of union upon this earth, ought to be a blessing to mankind, is not rather a curse.—Home Journal.

The Marys of the Bible.

Come now, my children, let us sit down under the branches of the old elm tree, where we shall find a shade from the heat of the sun. Here we can rest for a few minutes, and enjoy the pleasant scene.

When we have well looked on the prospect, I will tell you about the pious Marys of the Bible. We can enjoy the sweet breezes, and get health for our bodies, while we gain good for our souls.

Now I see you are ready to listen to me, and so I will begin. The first of these holy women is Mary of Egypt. Her name is spelt Miriam in the Old Testament, but that is the same as Mary in the New. The books of the Old Testament were written in Hebrew and those of the New in the Greek language, but the name in both languages has the same meaning. All Scripture names express some thought or sense; and so Miriam and Mary alike signify "exalted." What a happy thing it would be if every little girl who bears this name was truly exalted—not lifted up with vanity and pride, but raised in the fear and favor of God, and exalted by a holy life! I hope you know all about Miriam; how she was placed to watch her infant brother when he was laid in an ark of bulrushes by the water's side; and how gladly she ran to bring her own mother to be the nurse of her dear little babe. If you do not know about her, get your Bible as soon as you go home, for it will be a shame for you to be ignorant any longer. (Exod. xv.; Numb. xii.)

Mary of Bethany. She was a gentle and loving woman, and sat at the feet of Jesus to hear his words. Whenever I think of her I seem to hear the kind words of her Lord and Teacher: "Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her." It was this Mary who broke the alabaster box and poured the precious ointment on the head of Jesus, while she wiped his feet with her hair. (Matt. xxxvi.; Luke x; John xi.)

Mary of Magdala was one who followed the Lord, as a disciple. Like the other Marys, she was drawn to him by feelings of gratitude. We may suppose we see her, torn by "seven devils." But Jesus is passing that way. He is going about doing good. The afflicted woman is brought to him, and at a word he heals her body and mind, and casts out the evil spirits. What a physician was Jesus! He healed the poor—and the rich too—without money, without delay, without medicine, and without pain. If he was so willing to cure the bodies of men, will he not have pity on their souls? Yes, he surely will; for he has died on the cross to take away their sins, that all who believe in him might be saved. (Matt. xxvii.)

Mary of Galilee was the mother of the apostle James, and of Joses and Salome. What a happy mother to have such pious and useful children! It is said that they all "ministered" to Jesus when he was in Galilee. Perhaps they took him to their house, and gave him food and a place of rest, for though he was the Lord of all worlds, yet he had on earth no spot to call his home. (Mark xv.)

Mary of Jerusalem was another happy mother. John, who was also called Mark was her son, and he became one of the first missionaries to the heathen. It was at her house the disciples met to pray when Peter was inprison. (Acts xii.)

Mary of Rome was a pious woman, who showed a great kindness to the apostle Paul—perhaps when he was in a prison at Rome. (Rom. xvi.)

But most honored of all was Mary of Bethlehem. She was not a princess, nor was she rich; for she was a poor young woman. Yet she was chosen to be the mother of our Lord. Though he was, in his divine nature, the Son of God, he grew up to obey his earthly mother. He loved her all through life; and when on the cross, he gave her to the care of his disciple John. Well did she bear the name of Mary, for she was indeed "exalted." Yet even this Mary may by men be exalted too much. She was the "most blessed among women," but she is not our Savior. Jesus is the only Mediator between God and men; it is through his merits alone that we can obtain pardon for our sins. Let us then in faith and love look to him. (Matt. ii.)

There, I see you have listened to what I had to say about these holy women. It is very pleasant to think that they all loved and served the Lord on earth, and that they are now in heaven. May you be like them here, then you shall be with them there forever!

Intelligence from Our Mission Rooms.

OUR GENERAL COLLECTIONS.—Dr. Reid, in a stirring article on the resources and progress of the "Northwest," has these words, which, we trust, will be heeded: "At this time of most perishing need our general collections are failing us. The statistics are alarming. If the health of the general body fails, every part must suffer. Every where among our people there must, therefore, be the profoundest concern for our schools, our missions, our Church extension and our other great interests. They concern each member, for they concern us all."

AN UNHAPPY SHOWING.—We hope the city named is not our city. We have the preacher's name who writes as follows: "Judging from the missionary organizations of the Methodist Sunday schools in this city, the missionary spirit of this Conference is not quite up to the times. The most of these Sunday school missionary societies in this city have no other object than to raise money to purchase books and to pay their own incidental expenses. I have very little sympathy with such missionary societies. In fact, they are not missionary societies, and to call them such is to sail under false colors, to teach the children pious frauds, and to cultivate the natural selfishness of the heart."

PASSING AWAY.—We reported in a late "slip" the departure of our dear Brother Schureman Halsted, but we did not then know that he would overtake, among those "arrayed in white," some precious fruit from our mission in India, who, we are just advised, have entered "into the joy of our Lord," namely: Joseph Fieldbrave, an excellent preacher and a good man, and Emma Janvier, the first native member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India. She was the wife of our first native preacher, and was singing with her latest breath,

I have two homes, two happy homes,
By God my father given;
One precious home is here on earth,
My other home is Heaven.

Both the above passed over to the other shore during the summer months.

OUR MISSIONARY TREASURY.—The Pittsburg Advocate, in noticing the "inside view of our treasury," says: "But little need be added; it tells its own tale. The appeal is a strong one; but it is even stronger in fact than mere appearance; for during the year ending August 31, the payments by the Missionary treasury exceeded its receipts by $150,000. This announcement is a call to the Church to increase its missionary contributions. It gratifies us that the churches in Chicago are responding nobly to this call for increased collections. Park Avenue, Rev. J. H. Bayliss, has given $300, a slight advance over last year; Centenary $1200, an advance of $700; and Wabash Avenue $3500, an advance of $1214. Let others go and do likewise, and our depleted treasury will then become plethoric with the means of augmenting the number of our missionaries abroad. A little while ago the American Board of Foreign Missions was in debt. It made a call upon its friends. They hastened to its relief. Its debts are now all paid, and it has good supplies of funds on hand. Let the call of our treasury meet with a like generous and prompt response."

THREE THOUSAND SOULS!—What means this multitude of godly persons assembled in one place for several days, occupying private houses which have been thrown open to guests, the Free Academy of this city, and a large steamboat on the river, converted into lodging houses for their entertainment? What prompted a party of sixteen Vermonters to devise the novel housekeeping arrangements described as follows: "It consists of a sleeping-car, to which is attached another car, much like a baggage-car. In this there is a pantry, in which are crockery, cooking implements, provisions, etc., sufficient for a party of forty or more. A table extends from one end of the car about two-thirds of its length. There are two bunks for the cooks. The sleeping-car is furnished with blankets, pillows, etc., and has good toilet facilities. It will accommodate about thirty." This all was to join the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions on their anniversary, and occasion of rejoicing for having been brought up out of the "tribulation" of a great debt. It was a good time—"a great conflagration" in the city of Norwich, as Bishop Jones would have it.

O that all might catch the flame!
All partake the glorious bliss!

GERMANY.—From a letter just received from Rev. J. F. Hurst, professor in the Martin Mission Institute at Frankfort, we learn that Rev. F. Paulus had arrived from Berlin, and would immediately enter on his duties as teacher in the Institute. The new building is not completed yet, and it is thought best not to hurry it to completion this autumn. They have hired rooms for the winter, and have organized their classes. They have fourteen students. Dr. Hurst is going to commence an English service once a day in the hired rooms until the Institute is finished. This service will give character and strength to our work in Frankfort. We gladly believe that if Brother Martin should live ten years longer (and thousands of good people on reading this will say, may he live more than ten years!) he will have additional reason to rejoice in the benevolent contribution which he made for founding this new institute.

From Monrovia.

LIBERIA, AFRICA,
September 10, 1868.

REV. DOCTOR NEWMAN: I pen you these lines hoping you are well and in the enjoyment of good health. I here to-day am glad to inform you that I am now in Monrovia preaching once and twice per week in the Methodist Episcopal Church. My thought is not to stay or reside in the capital but to go among the natives. I find myself not very far from the Mandingo tribe from which my grandfather came.

What they now want to hear is the true Gospel of Christ. We want here the Holy Ghost Ministers, men that are heaven born, heaven baptized, qualified for the ministry. I send you a few lines in this of a sheet or two in their writing, to show to the brethren what a nation I am among. But the gospel is in a very slow progress in civilizing and christianizing the heathen. The Mandingo tribe number from sixteen to seventeen millions. Some of the chiefs have said to me: "How can Jesus be the Son of God?" "God had no wife!" "Jesus was a Prophet." "Jesus was a Prophet like Mohammed." "Mohammed told us there was but one true God," and hence that saying they verily believe. To let you know I have been among them I enclose these copies, read them if you please and let my brethren know it. I am glad that I am able to inform you that I am one man that has a missionary spirit in me. I am still riding that horse you call faith, feeling I have done my Master's will by coming here. God bless you all! I still remain the same man I was when I was there. Let all the churches know these things that I have said unto you. As soon as my probation as a member of conference is out I expect to travel among the heathen. I close my letter by saying when I die, I'll die on my grandfather's land. Please answer these lines as soon as possible and let me hear from you. My family are tolerably well at this time. Hoping these few lines will find you the same, allow me to subscribe myself your humble servant in Christ,

HARDY RYAN.

How to Entertain Guests.

Emerson says: "I pray you, O excellent wife! not to cumber yourself and me to get a rich dinner for this man or this woman, who has alighted at our gate, nor a bed-chamber made ready at too great a cost. These things, if they are curious in, they can get for a dollar at any village. But let this stranger see if he will, in your looks, in your actions and behavior, your heart and earnestness, your thought and will, what he cannot buy at any price at any village or city, and which he may well travel fifty miles, and dine sparely, and sleep hard, in order to behold. Certainly let the beard be spread and the bed be dressed for the traveller; but let not the emphasis of hospitality be in these things."

A friend says, in allusion to the practice of buying and selling wives in Egypt, that tho[illegible] wife didn't cost him a cent, h[illegible]ted in the bargain.

Under a suspension of the rules, Mr. Curell, of Orleans, presented the following petition:

To the Honorable House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana:

The petition of the undersigned, attorney at law, respectfully represents that in the spring of 1867 he was employed by his Excellency Governor B. F. Flanders to prepare the necessary papers, and represent, as an attorney, the claim of the State of Louisiana before the Commissioner of the Internal Revenues for a remission of the tax assessed on the circulation of the State; that said tax at that time amounted to over ten thousand dollars in United States treasury notes; that such tax was demanded of the Treasurer monthly, and distringas threatened if the tax was not paid; that your petitioner duly appeared before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States and presented oral and written arguments to prove the illegality of such tax, and on the decision of the said Commissioner that said tax was legal, the petitioner had the case submitted to the Attorney General of the United States, who sustained the positions assumed for the State, and under this decision the claim for said tax was abandoned, and the State released from a liability which would by this time have amounted to $20,000.

Your petitioner therefore prays, in consideration of said employment and services, that your honorable body will make an appropriation of five hundred dollars to pay him for his services in said matter, and in proof of said claim and services that he be allowed to present to your body, or the committee to which this may be referred, the certificates or the testimony of the late Governor B. F. Flanders, and the late Treasurer of the State, Adam Giffen.

And your petitioner will ever pray, etc.,

ALEXANDER WALKER.

GENTLEMEN—Your Committee on Internal Improvements to whom was referred Senate bill No. 88, entitled "an act to amend and readopt section first of an act entitled 'an act for the corporation, organization, etc., of works of public improvement, etc.,' approved March 14, 1855," most respectfully report favorably.

A. J. DEMAREST,
Chairman;
W. C. MELVIN,
M. RAYMOND,
DAVID YOUNG,
JAMES McCULLEN.

The report was received, adopted, and placed on the calendar for the third reading.

Mr. Curell, of Orleans, member of the Judiciary Committee, submitted the following minority report on House bill No. 11:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.
Room Committee on Judiciary,
New Orleans, August 24, 1868.

To the Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives:

The undersigned, a member of this committee, to which was referred House bill No. —, entitled an act to protect all persons in their civil and public rights, begs leave to present this, his minority report, adverse to the recommendation of the majority of this committee.

Of the many reasons for which this bill should not be adopted, the undersigned first urges its unconstitutionality.

The late State Convention saw fit to follow in the footsteps of its predecessor in recognizing the principles of vested rights engrafted upon the constitutions of our sister States, and embodied this recognition of rights in article 110 of the Constitution of 1868, which reads: "No ex post facto law nor any law impairing the obligations of contracts shall be passed, nor vested rights be divested, unless for purposes of public utility, and for adequate compensation made."

The bill to protect all persons in their civil and public rights, the text of which I consider not only not in accordance with its title, but directly violative thereof, provides no adequate compensation, while it clearly divests the vested rights of proprietors of steamboats and other conveyances, places of entertainment, etc., and that, too, for no purpose of public utility.

This House should not, in its haste to grant new privileges to some, boldly attempt to legalize an unwarrantable dispossession of others, for the proprietors of these vested rights will need nothing more than the interposition of the courts to maintain these in their possession.

The undersigned believes with the late Chief Justice Eustis, and would like to impress the same conviction upon this House, that "a citizen's right to his property, under the law, is the highest of all public rights, and one which all men have the deepest interest in vindicating and maintaining."

This bill provides that "this act shall go into effect from and after its passage." Has its framer forgotten that the State of Louisiana and the city of New Orleans have entered into contracts with these proprietors of steamboats, etc., by their collection of licenses, etc., and that the Constitution of the United States, as well as the State Constitution, forbids the enactment of any law impairing the obligation of contracts?

Can it be pretended that these proprietors have no vested rights? The undersigned, for the purpose of illustration, will take from the number of those which it is proposed to dispossess, the proprietors of steam or sailing vessels, or water craft, for whose intention the bill seems particularly to have been framed.

Two short quotations from Angell on the law of common carriers will suffice for the purposes of this report, with the preface, however, that the author is a Massachusetts jurist, and the work is universally quoted and esteemed for its correct and lucid expositions of the common law, and the decisions upon this subject. At page 496, section 525, says: It is nevertheless true that the obligation (to carry persons who apply for transportation) is subject to the qualifications, that the regular fare be tendered, or there be an offer to pay it; that there be sufficient room; that freshets in a river do not render it impracticable or dangerous to cross a ferry, and that the applicant is not an unfit person to be received as a passenger, and that he had no design to injure the carrier in his business. The right of passengers to a passage on board of a steamboat is not an unlimited right. But it is subject to such regulations as the proprietor may prescribe for the due accommodation of passengers and for the due arrangement of their business. The proprietors have not only this right, but the further right to consult and provide for their own interests in the management of such boats as a common incident to their right of property. They are not bound to admit passengers on board who refuse to obey the reasonable regulations of the boat, or who are guilty of gross and vulgar habits or conduct, or who make disturbances on board, or whose characters are doubtful, or dissolute, or suspicious, and a portion whose characters are unequivocally bad. Nor are they bound to admit passengers on board whose object is to interfere with the interest or patronage of the proprietors, so as to make the business less lucrative to them.

Section 530 reads: Another qualification to which the prima facie duty of the owners of stage coaches, railroads and steamboats to receive persons who apply for a passage on tender of the fare, is their privilege of prescribing all reasonable regulations in respect to the admission of persons into their carriages, depot, etc. It is clear that proprietors of steamboats, etc., are divested of their property the very moment the Legislature imposes upon them such conditions as deprive them of the right to prescribe such rules as they may think expedient for the due arrangement of their business, and to consult and provide for their own interests, which Angell calls a common incident to their right of property. These rights have repeatedly been adjudicated upon and recognized in cases, some of which the undersigned reserves to himself the right to quote hereafter when this bill is taken up for the consideration of the House; the Legislature is also forbidden from passing such a bill as this because it would be contrary to public policy, a fact which none, however wild in their schemes of equality, can gainsay. The political axiom that society makes laws, but laws can not make society, is too well known to need any elaboration in a community where every one is aware that there have been lying dead upon its statute books laws passed in direct opposition to the sentiment of the people, such as those forbidding dueling, gambling, etc. This bill is an attempt to secure for a certain class of our population social rights which their representatives in the late Convention had no idea of giving them, and if enacted would generate constant and serious turmoils in the community. The members of this House all know the repugnance which the white population throughout the whole country have to treating those of the colored race upon terms of social equality with themselves, and even if it had the semblance of legality, such an enactment could never be enforced in the United States. Such a change as is contemplated by this bill could only be effected by social means, and requires time. Hurried legislation upon the subject can only be productive of evil, and erect new barriers against its accomplishment.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES R. CURREL,
Of Orleans.

Mr. Kent, of St. Helena, moved that the report be printed.

Carried.

Mr. Lott, of Rapides, moved that the bill be also printed and made the special order for Thursday next.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

Under a suspension of the rules the following communication from the Auditor of the State was read:

AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
State of Louisiana.
New Orleans, August 20, 1868.

To the Honorable Speaker of the House of Representatives:

SIR—In obedience to the law, which says: "Section 16: In all cases where the law recognizes a claim for money against the State, and no appropriation shall have been made to pay the same, the Auditor shall audit and settle it, and give the claimant a certificate of the amount thereof, under his official seal, if demanded, and shall report the same to the General Assembly with as little delay as possible," (See revised Statutes, 1856, section 16, page 28). I respectfully beg leave to make the following report:

Upon application of Mr. Chas. E. Fortier for payment of one-half of a claim for three thousand dollars, against the State of Louisiana as per judgment rendered by the Hon. Guy Duplantier, Judge of the Sixth District Court of the city of New Orleans, a copy of the judgment of which honorable court is herewith annexed; and upon the legal advising of the Hon. Simeon Belden, Attorney General of Louisiana, a copy of whose written opinion is herewith annexed, I have granted to Mr. Chas. E. Fortier a certificate of indebtedness on the part of the State for the undivided half of said judgment, amounting to $1500. with legal interest thereon from April 6, 1867, for which certificates of indebtedness I promise to issue my warrant whenever the General Assembly make an appropriation for the payment of the same.

As the case seems to be a very clear one of just indebtedness on the part of the State, and I have felt myself authorized and obligated under the law to acknowledge the justness of the whole claim of $3000, and as Mr. Fortier has been deprived of his just rights for a long period and suffered actual loss by the action of the State in the premises, I felt it my duty to recommend the immediate passage of a bill of relief for Mr. Charles E. Fortier, securing by special appropriation the payment of this debt due him by the State.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

G. M. WICKLIFFE,
Auditor of State.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
New Orleans, August 24, 1868.

To the Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives:

The undersigned, one of your Committee on Railroads, begs leave to report that he is unable to concur with the majority of your committee in their report on an act to incorporate the North Louisiana and Texas Railroad Company, for the following reasons:

Section eleven provides that on certain conditions the Governor of the State shall deliver to said railroad company bonds of the State of Louisiana to the amount of six thousand dollars for every mile of said road completed. The undersigned, in view of the large amount of State bonds now on the market, the amount that must soon be thrown upon the market to meet the current demands of the State, and in view of the low price which they now command in the market, considers it unwise at this time to increase these large amounts by adding some four hundred and fifty thousand dollars to the liabilities of our already impoverished State. He therefore desires that the eleventh and twelfth sections of the bill under consideration be stricken out.

Respectfully submitted.
AMOS KENT.

I do hereby concur with the above report.

HENRY L. REY.

A majority of your committee respectfully submit the testimony taken in the case of P. B. S. Pinchback vs. E. L. Jewell, with the conclusion that the following facts have been conclusively established:

1. That P. B. S. Pinchback received a majority of one hundred and sixty-three of the votes actually cast in the Second Senatorial District, but was deprived of a reputed majority in consequence of ballot-box stuffing, fraudulent tallying, and the substitution of Democratic tickets for Republican tickets.

2. That a large number of legal voters were wrongfully refused the right to vote and deterred from voting, who desired and intended to vote the Republican ticket with the name of P. B. S. Pinchback thereon for Senator in the Second Senatorial District.

And your committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

1. That E. L. Jewell was not elected from the Second Senatorial District, and is not entitled to his seat.

Grant is President—What are the Lessons of the Hour?

The first duty of every Republican is to return thanks to Almighty God that the American people have been true to their God, their country and themselves; and that the MAN whom the Lord appointed to put down the rebellion, hath He chosen to be the ruler of His people. Then, all hail! Ulyses S. Grant, the "friend of all; the enemy of none." Standing with Washington and Lincoln, he is the hope of millions, and his response to the greetings of his countrymen is "WITH MALICE TOWARD NONE, AND CHARITY TO ALL," "LET US HAVE PEACE." Chosen by a majority rarely equaled, his strong common sense, his impartial justice, his incorrnptible patriotism, his modesty, moderation and frankness, his love of freedom, his fidelity to the Constitution, and his faith in God, are qualities which fit him for the duties of the nation's Chief Magistracy; and supported by his intelligent, virtuous and wealthy constituency and upheld by the prayers of the Church, he will not disappoint those who have elevated him to power; but will insure to the whole country an administration of wisdom, justice and peace. Our joy is great; our gratitude greater, and the one would have been more jubilant and the other more emotional, had his election been a surprise, but the October elections had made it a certainty, and, therefore, the "glad tidings" are received with serene satisfaction and placid gratitude. Te Deum Laudamus!

And now that the election is over, let us review the situation and inquire what are the lessons of the hour?

1. The election of Grant is a triumphant approval of Congress and an unqualified condemnation of Andrew Johnson. The issue has been referred to the whole people, and they have decided against a man who deserted his party, who sought to make treason respectable, who villified Congress as a body of usurpers, who permitted the murder of loyal men, and who used, in the most unscrupulous manner, the patronage of the people's government to secure the presidential nomination of the Democratic party. Now let him take his place with John Tyler and Millard Fillmore, and let the trio stand forth as a warning to all such who may hereafter be tempted to betray their party and sacrifice the peace of a great people to elevate themselves to power. As was said of Judas, so it will soon be said of Andrew Johnson, "He has gone to his own place." And with his going will go Seward, and Wells, and Randall, whose sycophancy has been no less disgusting to all sensible men, than their incapacity has been avouched a hundred times. Let them go.

2. And the great event now in contemplation is pregnant with solemn and impressive lessons to the people of the South. Like the Bourbons, they have been unwilling in the past to learn anything wise or good, yet they may now awake to their true situation. Deceived again by the Democrats of the North, they may be led to reflect that the Republicans are their better and truer friends. At all events, let them now settle down to the consideration that a majority of the American people have approved of and have resolved that reconstruction is an unalterable fact; that it shall be carried out; that the Government of United States shall be maintained in the South; and that loyal citizens shall be protected in the exercise of their rights, in all parts of the national domain. This is the calm verdict of the people, and acquiesence is now an interest and a virtue. This is the lesson, gentlemen, and the sooner it is learned by heart the better it will be for the South you so much love. Resistance to the laws; the assassination of Republicans, and all attempts to override the will of the majority, will only bring a standing army in your midst, and to be quartered upon you. In this we reflect the nation's sentiment.

3. And to no other class, especially in the South, is this hour more replete with lessons of sound wisdom than to the Republicans themselves. As the dominant party, you should remember that magnanimity, judiciously displayed, is a virtue and a glory; that the social, financial and educational interests of the minority, composed almost exclusively of whites, should be sacredly cared for and their wishes honestly consulted; that wisely, all political disabilities should be removed; that official corruption must be eschewed; that economy must be practiced; that the material interests of the State must be promoted; that every foul scheme, whether for political aggrandizement or personal gains, must be discarded; that men must be appointed or elected to office not because they are white or because they are black, but because they are fit and qualified, and that every attempt to put one race over the other race, must be denounced as against nature, against the best interests of society and against true Republicanism. In a word, gentlemen, reorganize your party in Louisiana, which recent disturbances have seriously affected, and start afresh, and while you shall use all lawful means to remain in power, prove yourselves worthy of that power and gather into your ranks the good and true of all parties, without respect to race or color. Do this, gentlemen, and the glorious future which now opens before you, and which allures you onward with strange yet holy witchery, shall be a future realized in the practical embodiment of all those great principles for which our brothers fought, and for the administration of which the American people have just elected Ulyssus S. Grant.

Consecration to Christ.

The world's conquerors have been men of one idea, with many and marked weaknesses; here they have been consistent; making everything bend to their master passion, subordinating to it every thought of ease, profit, life.

This alone made them pre-eminent, gave their names to history, enabled them to mould their generation, and give character, good or evil, to the nations.

The same general law obtains in matters of religion; it gave Mahomet his dominion; created the Papal power; crowned Luther prince of reformers and made Wesley the apostle of a faith now professed by millions of Christian people.

This life devotion, abnegation of self in favor of something desirable, has given the world whatever of good there is in science or philosophy; severe study, intense anxiety, wasting toil, regardless of life itself, have brought to us, by the hands of Bacon, Newton, Davy and others, the fragrance of crushed flowers and the juice of bruised grapes, to cheer and refresh us on our journey to the grave.

Wilberforce and Clarkson, Thompson and Garrison, consecrated themselves to freedom, and to-day, throughout the world, the liberty bell is ringing.

Howard beat upon the dungeon walls until humanity was permitted to enter and bring hope to despairing criminals.

History is full of such examples, for these men make history, they are the factors of society, the positive forces of the world. Is there not danger lest we lose from our national casket the jewel of heroism? Not alone on the field of carnage is this virtue called for. "Peace hath its victories" and its heroes too; in many a humble, lowly sphere they fight their battle alone; and if true to themselves and their aims, though life may be the cost, they triumph. A spendthrift, while in rags and sawing wood, before a palatial mansion once his own, conceived the purpose of again possessing it, with all his lost wealth; a few years later this purpose was achieved. A poor mechanic said, at a meeting to raise funds for building a church in New York, by God's help these hands shall earn within a year, a thousand dollars for this object; and it was done.

There is nothing in the grand universe of Jehovah, which so clothes a creature with dignity, so ennobles one with more than knightly heroism, as Christianity; but in order to attain royalty and priesthood in God's kingdom, no meaner aim must be yours, than "Holiness unto the Lord." Would you grow up into Christ, drink in of his fulness and really "enjoy religion," enter carefully upon the study of the subject of consecration to Christ; good, honest, common sense is needed just here; the conditions are the same for the attainment of eminence and efficiency in the world and in the church; with both, "whatsoever a man soweth he shall also reap." It was not the lessons learned at Gamaliel's feet that made Paul the great apostle of the Gentiles, but his determination to "know nothing among men save Christ and him crucified." Old Polycarp, with Christ for his all, could step calmly into the arena, among the hungry beasts, and thus do his part in giving honor and character to Christianity. In later times Carvasso and Harlan Page, Isabella Graham and Mrs. Palmer became great in the Kingdom of Heaven, by the consecration of all their being to Jesus. Only in this way is heart purity to be obtained in any degree. This act of the Christian, done in faith and humility, answers to throwing open the doors and windows of a room; the light must enter, no obstacle is in the way. Neglect it and you must walk in darkness more or less complete. Remember too, that God demands the whole heart. No one ever received a clear sense of pardon without consecration, up to the full measure of light that then shone upon the path of duty, and the Scripture tells us "as ye receive the Lord Jesus even so walk in him." Your darkness, coldness, lack of true religious joy arises from stepping aside out of the straight and highway. You have withdrawn from God's altar some of the precious gifts you freely, gladly laid thereon in other days. Duty is plain then; come as before and school yourself sternly, as do the votaries of wealth, of fame, or science. It may be humiliating, the more so if you have sinned by word or act, but yours may be rather the inner fault, unseen by all but God, who will not chide, but in either case will welcome his banished and shed afresh his love abroad in your heart.

"He is Governor by the Grace of God and the Will of the People."

Such was our language in last week's Advocate touching Governor Warmoth's rights as the legally elected Governor of the free State of Louisiana, and such is our language now. The Times of Sunday last thought it had caught a white crow and raised the cry of "Bourbons;" "Oxford divines;" "legitimists of the continent;" and accused the "Cardinal" of "monarchism" and of being the defender of "Queen Isabella," the "Duke of Parma," and the "Duchess of Modena." Were this true we had a right to expect plaudits and not hisses, for the white people of the South are essentially aristocratic in their structure of society and modes of living, and were the question submitted by a popular vote they would choose a monarchy to a republic. Dei gratia was once music to their souls and on many a family escutcheon was inscribed with kingly pride—Dieu et mon droit. They claimed the right, "by the grace of God" to hold an entire race in slavery and buy and sell men, women, and children. They asserted a "divine right" to be masters of four millions of people created in the image of God and redeemed by the blood of His Son. When remonstrated with, their "Old Bourbon" reply was: "We are slaveholders by the grace of God." To all arguments from justice and humanity against their claim, they had the brief Latin response, jure divino: but they forgot that other grand old Latin maxim: jure naturæ æquum est neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuria fieri locupletiorem. It is certainly not agreeable to natural justice that a stranger should reap the beneficial pecuniary produce of another man's work. As the pursued burglar to shield himself, cries, "stop thief;" so the Times cries out "Bourbons, Bourbons!" on the principles of stealing the "livery of heaven to serve the devil in." It were a light task to prove beyond a cavil that the late Confederacy was a compact that included all the more offensive dogmas, traditions and claims of the "Holy Alliance;" the "House of Hapsburg," and the new fugitive "Bourbons."

There are three senses in which we used the phrase, "By the grace of God," touching the State government of Louisiana. 1. God is the primary author of civil government,—"the powers that be are ordained of God." 2. By His grace or favor we have a Republican administration in Louisiana. 3. And we have this government by the aid of the people, vox populi vox Dei. But the Times omitted the latter sentiment; it was a two-edged sword; it was a sentiment which that journal had sought to palm off as its own and could not therefore accord it to us. That Henry Clay Warmoth was duly elected Governor of Louisiana by a majority of the legal voters of the State cannot be denied, and because the people had chosen him as their Chief Magistrate we pronounced him "Governor by the grace of God." That the "voice of the people is the voice of God." Cicero plainly says: "In everything the consent of all nations is to be accounted the law of nature, and to resist it is to resist the voice of God." The Times will not admit that the blacks are a part of the people; that is, they are not legal voters, but the American people through their Congress and Supreme Court say they are. Whose voice is authoritative? It is the old question; shall the minority or majority rule? And such was his majority that could all the disfranchised whites be absolved of their political disabilities, Governor Warmoth's constituency would still be in the majority. And that constituency embraces a portion of the taxpayers of the State. It is idle for the Democrats to arrogate to themselves that they are the taxpayers. The Republicans of New Orleans pay taxes on not less than $15,000,000, and in every parish there are Republican planters and merchants who bear their share of the burdens of the State. But were they not worth a dollar of real estate the Republicans would still be compelled to pay their share of the assessments. The rent the poor man has to pay quadrates with the taxes the landlord is assessed; the price of bread he eats and the coarse cloth he wears is governed by the same rule in the merchant's store. The "one per cent tax" will not come out of property holders and merchants alone, but will be paid in part or in whole by the tenant and the customer. When taxes are heavy, rents and goods go up. Why? Because this is the way the poor laborer has to pay his taxes. Every landholder and merchant is a tax-gatherer. We confess a cordial disgust for the partisan cry of the rights of property holders and for "property holders associations," when it is a notorious fact that the poorest black man in the State pays his pro rata tax, though in a different way from the land holders, but just as honestly and truly. We therefore maintain that Governor Warmoth's constituency not only includes a majority of the legal voters in Louisiana but a due proportion of the tax payers of the State.

But the Times asks: "Is saddling the State with the iniquitous lottery scheme the most vital blow which could be struck at the morality of a people an act of grace?" Out of the half dozen questions put to us we select this because it is definite, it names a bill, all the other questions about "plundering" are inuendoes. We make a distinction between Governor Warmoth's election and his administration. We asserted the good old doctrine of vox populi vox Dei as to his election. His administration may be an abuse of that election, but we do not believe that it is. But it may be comforting to the Times to have our opinion on the lottery bill. Well, here it is. We consider that bill a sin against God, and a crime against society, and it was so denounced from the beginning by the Advocate. It was conceived in sin and shapened in iniquity; and the reputation of those who voted for it will suffer thereby.

Is the Times satisfied? Well, we now point with honest pride to the noble protests of Speaker Lowell and Lieutenant Governor Dunn, and to the fact that Governor Warmoth had written his veto message on the bill, but withheld it only at the earnest and persistent request of prominent Louisianians. We hold ourselves ready to join the Times or any other journal in denouncing iniquity, whether in Republicans or Democrats; whether in Governors or legislators, and we also stand ready whether with others or singly and alone to maintain that Henry Clay Warmoth is Governor of Louisiana by the "Grace of God and the will of the People."

Lying.

"Thou shalt not lie" is one of the commandments of the Decalouge. A commandment, however, which probably is more frequently broken than any other. Many of the wise men among the ancients taught that lying was right if any good could be accomplished or any evil averted thereby.

Christianity, however, is unbending in her demands that all speak the truth, and pronounces a curse on those who fail to obey.

It is easy to see what an injury society would receive from the universal practice of lying, to say nothing of the demoralization resulting to those who utter the falsehoods.

There seems not to be a clear understanding in the minds of many as to the nature of lying. They regard it simply as stating clearly in words what they know to be false. This, of course, is lying, but falsehood is not confined alone to words. One can lie as well by the tones of the voice as by the actions and gestnres. The accompanying words may be true but these make it a lie. If the intention is to deceive they are guilty of falsehood.

Lying is not confined to any particular race, class, profession, or calling. A long chapter might be written on business lying. An equally long chapter might be written also on fashionable lying. It is sad to see men lying but far worse it seems to see beautiful and accomplished ladies, which we are taught to regard as more fully allied with purity and innocence, polluting their tongues with falsehood. And yet thousands are thus guilty. Fashion says you must treat your callers thus and thus. They are received therefore with the greatest apparent affection. We hear the words as they enter, "I am so happy to see you." A lie, for after the callers depart we hear the words, "I hope they will never call again." The offenders excuses themselves by saying that such forms are demanded by society. But it is lying, nevertheless, and society has no right to make such unreasonable demands. It will not improve the matter to call them "white lies." They are lies and all the smooth names will not change their nature and make them less odious in the sight of God.

The habit grows on the offender, his conscience becomes less tender until finally they lie without any compunctions of conscience and without scarcely knowing it.

Lying seems to be an offshot of slavery. The slightest offense under this system often brought the severest punishment. There was, of course, a desire to escape and the temptation was ever before them to screen themselves by falsehood. This being pursued for years the conscience became dull if not dead upon this point, and lying became almost "second nature."

Our colored friends are probably aware that it is a universally admitted fact that they are as a general thing too regardless of their word. It is not pleasant to have such a reputation. It is not necessary to have such a reputation longer. They should now seek a better. Habit may be strong but it can be broken. Resolve in all matters to stick to facts. Speak "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." Conscience will soon become quick and tender and check the slightest inclination to prevaricate. Remember the word of God, "All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."

Insult to General Hatch.

This noble soldier and true patriot, who represents the United States Government as head of the Freedman's Bureau, has made his report to General Howard in which he states that 166 freedmen have been killed in Louisiana during the past year, and for this statement of facts he is spoken of by the New Orleans Crescent in the most disrespectful language. Here it is:

One Hatch, superintendent of the institution known as the Freedmen's Bureau, reports that 166 negroes (loil people he calls them) have been killed in Louisiana during the last year; whereupon he recommends an indefinite continuance of the institution. But the superintendent has made a mistake. He can easily calculate how long it will take, at the rate of 166 per annum to kill off the negro voters in Louisiana, under the bureau system. It would take a good while; but certainly not an indefinite time. The freedmen will see now why the superintendent desires his institution to be made permanent—he wants to get rid of them at the rate of 166 per annum. But why is he thus sanguinary? What have the freedmen done to him to make him so vindictive?

Such language and misstatements are unworthy of respectable journalism, and we can only account for their appearance in the Crescent by the undue excitement of the election and the bitterness which defeat not unfrequently engenders. Colonel Nixon can not deny that 166 negroes have been killed during the past year, as the city papers stated that 100 had been killed at Opelousas, and we can count up 100 more subsequently killed in this city and other parts of the State. We think General Hatch's estimate is entirely too low, and we hope in a subsequent report he will give the additional murders which have since been reported to his headquarters. As to the continuance of the Freedmen's Bureau that is a question dependent upon the future management of the bureau, especially in the parishes. For a year past there have been many worthless, drunken, miserable agents who have joined the whites against the poor blacks and then reported against the freedmen, throwing the blame of the disturbance upon them. Let such agents be removed and the continuance of the bureau will be an incalculable blessing to both whites and blacks.

As to General Hatch he needs no eulogium from us. He has military record of which he may be justly proud. His firm and decided action in the late disturbances in our city has given offense to the Crescent and the Democrats, but he is too patriotic to be influenced by them and too great to be injured by their unmanly and contemptible ineuendoes.

No cotton on the wharves, no travelers at the hotels, no buyers for our goods. Such is the burden of the Bulletin's refrain this week. "New Orleans needs peace." Ah, indeed! And where did the comprehension of this particular need first pierce your cranium? Have you just found out that New Orleans can not afford, with its solid column of Knights of the White Camelia, and their flying skirmishers of outside roughs and thugs, to be transformed into a mighty beer garden or gladiatorial circus, with the niggers and carpet-baggers thrown in to be rended and devoured for the amusement of that particular element of your population. Colonel Pope's funeral was attended in Illinois by sixty thousand spectators. They will probably vote for Grant, and defer all business they may wish to transact here until they hear farther from you.

The land agent who lost a $50,000 sale of real estate last week, to an Illinoisan, on account of the massacres here, will probably withdraw from the circles if he belongs to them.

The merchant who lost a lucrative arrangement with a large Cincinnati produce house on account of the troublous aspect of affairs, will not vote for Seymour and Blair.

In short, gentlemen, as Seymour said to you before the war, "the stars in their courses fight against you." The fates of the world are arrayed against you; your programme of the violent suppression of all political opposition to you, may be death to a few of us—it was to Colonel Pope, the hero and gentleman, whom you murdered in cold blood—but it is suicidal to you. Your talk of a war of races is idle. There will be no such war. It is impossible—you may have a massacre, but even then it will have to be going to the houses of the colored men and slaughtering them like sheep. This will be too much even for the stomachs of the thirtieth of July men. You may assassinate some more Northern men, but that will only deepen the infamy which stains your skirts. Threats are made that you will prevent the General Assembly from meeting. You may try, but you will fail, and the attempt will only add another blot to the blood-stained history of New Orleans.

We say again it is time for the merchants and business men of New Orleans to withdraw their names from the rolls of the K. W. C., leave pistols and knives to the roughs and let people vote, and think, and speak as they please.

We commend to to them the following from the Bulletin. Take your choice between hunting down negroes and carpet-baggers, or selling cotton and produce:

If the day bring bloodshed and turbulence we must submit to the imputation that our city is unsafe for purposes of commerce. Suppose then the Common Council fail to provide for the safety of the city by allowing the service of the present police, under protest until its legality can be tested, or by accepting the aid of volunteer police, will not the whole responsibility fall on them? The constituency of the Governor is the whole State. That of the Mayor and Council is the city. To have it said in the historical biography of the Mayor that during his term fire and bloodshed were allowed, because of a quarrel with the State authorities as to who should properly prevent fire and bloodshed, would be a very ugly record. To have merchants and other men of enterprise reproaching the city administration because of suspension, insolvency and ruin, would be a still more serious consequence of obstinacy or imbecility.

Fugitives from St. Mary.

Last week another party of fugitives arrived from the neighborhood of Franklin, it consisted of the families of Father Baldwin and of Judge Fisk. Frequent visits of mounted white men threatening and firing off pistols, riding about the dwellings in search of obnoxious persons with fears for life itself, made the vicinity most undesirable as a home for women and children.

The family of Mr. Baldwin have gone to Berea, Ohio. Judge Fisk's wife and children are homeless fugitives, he having lost all his ample fortune through fidelity to the Union.

The immediate cause of their flight was a visit on Wednesday night about ten o'clok by a party who drove away the negroes, turned off their cistern water, took off doors and windows, threw down gates and fences, and lingered around most of the night. The party fired into one of the workmen's shanties on the Orphans' place and did some damage to the property, as the building has been suspended because of the riots and no laborers are there, the pretense of having been fired upon from the Home is ridiculous. It is reported that many Republicans above have been killed; a body with the bowels cut across was recently drawn up by a seine, supposed to be one of the victims. No troops have yet reached the scene of lawlessness, and violence is openly threatened if any arrests are attempted to be made. The colored people are peaceful beyond expectation, they hold no meetings, religious or otherwise, and do not mean to attempt voting as known parties propose killing such as vote the Republican ticket. These oppressed people are calmly waiting for justice from the power which gave them freedom and assured them ample protection in its enjoyment.

We give below the Banner's account of the Wednesday night affair, clipped from the New Orleans Times:

St. Mary.—We copy as follows from the Planters' Banner of the thirty-first:

Last Wednesday night a portion of the Franklin patrol were fired upon from the orphan asylum near Baldwin's. The patrol made a charge on the house, but found nobody there. The negroes had fled. Captain Baylie P. Vinson was with the patrol.

The negroes are quiet all over the St. Mary, and sugar making is progressing smoothly. We trust there will be no more threats of house burning and murder by the colored population, and that the white people will give them ample protection against violence and wrong.

Ames Methodist Episcopal Church.

There will be preaching every Sabbath at 11 A. M., in Dr. Newman's church, corner of St. Charles and Calliope streets, and social meetings for conference and prayer every Sunday and Thursday evening from eight to nine o'clock in the lecture room. You are invited.

Burnett's Cocoaine is not greasy or sticky. It is far superior to pomades or alcoholic washes as a hair-dressing.

Conspiracy.

We said a few days ago a few plain things on this ugly subject. We pointed out how many of the respectable business men who had allowed themselves to be drawn into a great armed political organization, which had for its object the overthrow of the government, were guilty of conspiracy and might, when the plans matured on the heights of Mount Caucasus broke out into overt acts, find themselves in the unpleasant situation of accessories before the fact. You are playing with dangerous weapons, gentlemen. You may be well armed and drill nightly and be ever so secret, and elect to disappear as many of your political enemies as you please. These men will not disappear, but your secret conspiracy will be blown to the winds, its members published to the world, and every dark whisper and ugly deed will come to light. No "Grand Commander" or "Council of Seven" will shield you, for they have taken care to isolate themselves from all responsibility. They will not be found, but you in the rank and file will, whenever your plot ripens into acts. Withdraw, gentlemen, and leave schemes of murder and armed violence to the congenial spirits of the bar-room and the market where they belong. Thus will you save your own reputation and that of our fair city; and thank us some day for our advice.

The Election.

On Monday before the election the following circular which speaks for itself, was distributed broadcast over the city. In connection with the massacres, negro-hunts, house guttings, and church sackings of the previous week, it was a fitting climax to the acts of violence which have made of the election in this city a fraud and a nullity. Let the evidence be brought in and let the election returns be treated as the law directs:

A WHITE MAN'S GOVERNMENT OR NO GOVERNMENT.

The hand of the oppressor bears heavily upon us! Let the Caucasian arise in his strength! Too long have we lain supine! Assert at once and in unmistakable accents your supremacy! This is a Government of white men—for white men, and by white men. Let white men vote solidly for their rights, and allow nothing to prevent the triumph of their principles! We have the means, and let us use them effectively!

It is full time that our strength was felt! None but the blue-blooded should vote! See to it you whose very existence is at stake, that none others do. In order to carry out the designs of the party the Council orders that the independent clubs station a company at and about each polling place for the accomplishment of our purpose.

Officers in charge will hold themselves in readiness at all times during the day and evening to act promptly upon all orders from the council.

By order of the COUNCIL OF SEVEN.

Man Proposes, God Disposes.

I have lived almost the three score years allowed to man, and at my age, looking back over the events of my past life. How true is the above saying when applied to my own plans and efforts for improving my talents to the best advantage for the good of myself and family. My plans of life, matured, formed and carried out with the most zealous care, have in many instances brought about effects adverse and the very reverse of what I intended. While in this train of thought it occured to me that He has the same controling power over nations as over individual actions. My own country furnishes the most stupendous illustration of the character, where two great parties are contending for a principle. One party says slavery must be free to go where it chooses in our country; the other party says we want our territory for our white surplus population; we pledge ourselves not to interfere with it where it is, but that must be its limits. God disposes. What does he say? I have raised your nation from infancy, and made you great, contrary to the principle of liberty. You are holding a large namber of my subjects in slavery, and now propose to keep them so I wait no longer for you to do justice. Ye have not done it willingly, now go to work and carry out each your propositions and I will make you work out mine, which is freedom to all. But you must suffer for your wickedness in not being just, according to the measures of your transgressions.

If we look back a few years in our nation's history to the time that Scott was a candidate for the Presidency, we find that both parties bowed to slavery in their platforms, to get its vote. This so elated the South, that they asked for the repeal of the Missouri compromise, which a Democratic Congress readily conceded. Thus, at their own request, the door was opened by which they thought to rush through to their own destruction. The people of the North had come to consider that compromise as a binding contract to be kept, and then opposed its repeal and repudiated many of the members that voted for it. How strange are the ways of Providence. Thus we see the party whose interest and intention was to establish and extend slavery, doing the very thing that would hasten its destruction, and the party whose interest prompted them to confine it in certain bounds, opposing it with all their energy. God disposes. Each now see that they took a wrong course to carry out their programme. The South then commenced sending settlers into Kansas, in order to carry slavery where the compromise had set apart for freedom. This opened the eyes of the North, and they began to rush in their spare population; each party doing their best. A long and bitter struggle ensued, but the free soil party, after suffering long, was finally successful. Many that were driven back to their homes in the States North, told their wrongs, and the murders and persecutions by the slave party. A new party was formed, who declared "They have repealed the Missouri compromise, and our watchword is no more slave States." This party was stimulated by the attempt of the South to carry slavery north of the line, to follow their example and carry freedom south of it. In 1860 it had become quite formidable, but by no means a controlling party. They nominated their candidate with small prospect of success. God disposes! The South, in this as well as almost every action they took, was to hurry on their ruin. Instead of uniting with the Democrats of the North, and going on and beating the opposing party, which they might easily have done, they quarreled with them and managed so that Lincoln was elected; they still had a large majority in both Houses, and could have things as they wished. The Southern leaders, however, had attained their object. Now they would go to the people with the cry that a Black Republican President had been elected, trusting that few would know that they had caused it. Now is the time, said they, for us to put our long cherished notions of dividing the Union, into operation. We can be rulers in a nation of our own. They went to the people with their harangues; they induced them to inaugurate the rebellion; they fired on the flag of the country at Fort Sumter, and seized on all forts and national property within their limits. The leaders of the Democratic party of the North cried, "No coercion!" But they might as well have told the waves of the ocean to be still, as to undertake to control the indignation of all classes of people at the North. The South had done their will and share in the great cause that was to destroy slavery Now the North must do the share allotted to them by the great ruler of nations. They did not seem to understand that the extinction of slavery was to result from the war; they fought to preserve the Union merely, and sent many a trembling slave back to his master. At this stage of the war, I presume, not one in ten of the soldiers had any sympathy for the negro. So long as we returned him to his master, misfortune followed our efforts. But adversity is a good schoolmaster, and we began to learn that returning the negro to his master enabled him to feed and clothe our enemies. The time arrived when we came to the conclusion that the emancipation of the slaves was necessary for the life of the nation. Notice was given that unless they returned to theie allegiance by a certain future specified time the proclamation of emancipation would be issued. They spurned the offer, and the die was cast. Our troops were victorious almost every where, and although the Democratic friends of the South at Chicago, to cheer them on, pronounced the war a failure on the part of the North, yet in less than six months the war was finished. How long will our Southern friends be deluded by promises of their Democratic friends at the North? They would gladly do as promised, for they want your assistance to bring them back into power. Their friendship is interested. The reason that they cannot perform is, because they can not carry the people with them. Every promise they make and every advice they proffer only places you in a worse condition. For instance, the amendments to the Constitution requiring that if you disfranchised any class or color of citizens they should not be counted in the apportionment for representatives as they were before the war. I never heard a man of any party undertake to defend that three-fifth provision in the Constitution. They opposed it and encouraged you to reject it. I think that amendment contemplated that you might disfranchise the negro race. But what have you gained by rejecting it? It showed Congress your hand, and that you must still be controlled by the strong arm of the nation. They were by your obstinacy led to pass more stringent laws for reconstructing your States; how far the opposition to the reconstruction measures will proceed is yet in the future. The Democrats of the North we expect to do in the future as in the past, oppose every measure of Congress. Will you follow their lead on to ruin, or will you in good faith return to the allegiance you owe the country and obey its laws!

Whatever course you may take I can assure you of one thing that is certain. The "Rump Congress," so-called, in derision by the Northern Democracy, are the representatives of the people and will be sustained by them. So act on this knowledge. The great error of the Democrats in this canvass rests principally with the South and must overwhelm them in defeat. It was in sending leading rebels to the New York Convention. When we see such as General Forrest, whose record at Fort Pillow is abhored by all men; of Semmes who destroyed so much of the property of Northern citizens and whose acts are considered no better than piracy; of Wade Hampton and a great many more of that stamp whose prominent acts of the rebellion are as familiar as household words. If our Democrats had rejected them the people might not have taken the alarm, but they affiliated with them and treated them with so much respect that thinking men became alarmed. We are Democrats but not rebels. But this looks as if our leaders were and we will not follow their lead at this election. This feeling is wide spread and you will see it in the difference between the electoral vote and the State ticket. Many will divide their vote and go the Democrat State ticket only, many other Democrats will go the whole Republican ticket. I have a brother who has long been a resident in the South; I have children there and feel a deep interest in their welfare. I want to see your people prosperous and happy, and to be so, you must be obedient to the laws and respect the life and property of all, and allow all to enjoy their own political opinions in perfect safety. This works well at the North and would work well at the South. Again I would say to you, be no longer deluded by the promises of aid from Northern men. As long as they have the will to do it the people will never give them the power; I mean their aid in opposing the government and laws of Congress. The majorities this fall in all the Northern States (I think there will not be an exception) will tell you more of the real state of things than all the promises of individuals. Heed what the people tell you and act accordingly.

"Be wise in time, 'tis madness to defer."

Acknowledge the great principle for which the Republican party contend—the right of suffrage to all citizens, which the coming election will show you 'tis vain to fight against, and you will then have no reason to complain that your opponents are electing ignorant men and bad men to office. Common ground will then be offered on which the good, honest men of all parties may unite. The colored people vote solid now, because it is a matter of political life or death with them. It is plain to see that they will vote for the worst man in the community if he will but stand up for their civil and political rights in preference to voting for a better man who is opposed to them. Declare in favor of their right of suffrage, it being no longer a personal matter with them, you break up their vote the same as any other class or nationality. Be sure such declaration will take the wind entirely from your opponents sails. The great bone of contention will be gone. The good men of that party will then unite with you in electing the wise and honest to office, and in all those plans which will tend to the upbuilding of the material interests of your State and of the country at large. ## Washington Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, October 29.

The religious interest is still maintained at McKendry Church, the altar of prayer was crowded last night and many have been added to the church records. East Washington and Ryland Churches have also shared in this set time to favor Zion. The Sunday School Convention of this Presiding Elder's district is holding evening sessions in Foundry Church; the exercises consist of addresses on the various branches of Sunday School study and instruction, illustrated by the blackboard, maps, and other objects of late introduction; songs of praise in solo and chorus, with recitations by the scholars. The precise object of these exercises is not so apparent to the audience as might be, and as for practical results on the respective schools it may not be suitable to offer a criticism without more knowledge than is now possessed on the subject. There is no improvement in the manners of Sunday School pupils any more than elsewhere, the general irreverence for the house and worship of God is a scandal to any age. This remark is applicable to youth in general and it is a matter of profound mortification that Sunday schools form no exception to the rule, nor is this defection confined to any particular denomination. Appropriate to the meeting of this convention a discourse was delivered by Rev. B. Peyton Brown last Sabbath on "Infant Church Membership." The discourse maintained the doctrine of infant justification and the possibillty and necessity of retaining that relation all through adult years. There is certainly great need of more frequent and clear exhibitions of this doctrine from the pulpit; it is surprising that so little is said and understood upon this subject so essential to the solid foundation of moral and Christian character. But to resume, the convention will continue till Saturday next, and terminate its business with a more general demonstration.

Rev. J. H. Vincent, Corresponding Secretary of the Methodist Sunday School Union, will occupy the pulpit on Sabbath next. This convention is held in conformity with instructions by the last session of the Baltimore Conference, and will no doubt contribute to increased activity in this important department of the Church.

Indeed, the Church, as such, has not aroused to a sense of its true relation to the Sunday school. There is no systematic nurture extended to it by the church; true, funds are contributed when called for, but the organization is in the hands of the young and inexperienced though devout and zealous members of the Church.

A little stir was made in the Twelfth infantry by an order last week to be ready to march to Memphis, Tennessee, but the order has not yet been executed—waiting, perhaps, for another Sunday and then move as has been the custom. The signal corps at Fort Greble will soon give exhibitions of the improvement, not to say perfection, achieved in that branch of military science.

The committee appointed by parties interested, to take sworn testimony, conceiving the bloody assault made by Baltimore ruffians on voters passing through that city, have reported. The facts are such as have been already given to the public. The matter will be brought before Congress at its approaching session. The assault was as infamous as it was cowardly, and demands no time-serving treatment at the hands of the National Legislature; otherwise this section will soon rival New Orleans and other portions of the South, in the number and brutality of the murders perpetrated for the enormous offense of thinking on political and religious subjects. What a besotted state of the public mind! These outrages are looked for and read as a price current paragraph of the daily papers.

The medical department of Howard University commenced its course of lectures yesterday.

The reduction of the force in the Second Auditor's office has been arranged. About one hundred will resign, the resignation to to take effect December 1, this allows one month's leave of absence with full pay. Time and meaus are thus afforded to seek other employment. This reduction arises out of the winding up of some branches of business in this bureau.

President Johnson has written a letter to Mr. Seymour, of New York, commending him for taking the stump as a presidential candidate.

The weather is all that the most nervous could desire.

Improvement in real estate advances very steadily.

During the month of September nearly half a million of property changed hands. Rents are maintained at high figures, notwithstanding thousands of buildings are in process of erection. The "carpet-baggers" have had no insignificant part in this swell in real estate. MORDECAI.

[For the New Orleans Advocate.]

EDITOR ADVOCATE:

In a former number of your paper you published an account of how I was compelled to go in the country to the Baldwin Plantation, in consequence of the citizens having banded together and determined that no Republican should be permitted to live in Franklin. I stayed at that place with the full knowledge that there was a band, pledged by a secret oath, to kill all the Republican office holders in the parish, including Messrs. Roberts and Joiner, the publishers of a Republican paper there. We thought that we might avoid such a calamity by not speaking to any of the band and keeping out of their way until after the election, when we supposed if Grant was elected they would quiet down, so that we could stay there in peace. We could not walk the streets without being hissed at and insulted in the grossest manner. When I passed up one street the rabble would gather so that I passed back some other street.

I was in Franklin on the day that Colonel H. H. Pope, sheriff, and Valentine Chase, the parish judge, were murdered. There are two roads leading to the Baldwin place, which form a junction before they reach there. In the evening I was admonished that the band had dressed in their uniform and intended to intercept and kill me, but I had no intimation that they intended to kill Colonel Pope and Judge Chase that night. I watched and saw which road the band took; I then mounted my horse and rode rapidly home, passing them before they came to the junction of the roads. I learned afterward that their plan was to intercept and kill me, and then divide and a part go to the house of Jack Moore, a colored man, and president of the Republican club in Franklin, and kill him, and the others to go and kill Colonel Pope and Judge Chase. Moore had gone about fifteen miles from home to attend a Repulican meeting, and stayed all night. They searched his house twice that night. Mr. Moore was obliged to take to the woods for safety. The next morning I heard of the murder of Colonel Pope and Judge Chase. The colored people had always looked upon Colonel Pope as their best friend. The report of his murder filled their minds with grief and the bitterest anguish, mingled with a desire for revenge, but as Colonel Pope had always advised them to be peaceful and quiet, some of their leaders came to me to know what they ought to do. I advised them to be quiet and stay at home, unless the Democrats got after them, and then to hide out. The Hon. John Page, the Representative from Jefferson parish, was there as one of the trustees of the Orphans' Home, to see about the interests of that institution. As he was embraced in the threat, it was not deemed prudent for him or myself to remain there any longer. We were on the bank of the Teche at a landing, when a steamboat came along; they refused to take us on the boat; two colored men then took us in a skiff up a short distance and landed us on the other side; we then took it on foot through the swamp to the lake shore. We had not been there long before we saw a schooner loaded with moss, going toward Brashear City. The two colored men took us in another skiff and took us to the schooner. We got in the schooner and found that all on board were Republicans, and professors of religion. Two were Baptist ministers. Late at night we stopged at an island about four miles above Brashear. There we found a Republican who lived in Brashear, but who had to come there to stay at night for fear of being murdered. He informed us that the Democrats had pickets all around Brashear, so that it would not be safe for us to land there that night. We then camped on the island, and built a fire under a large oak tree. As all of the party were members of the church, it was proposed to hold a camp-meeting. We sang and prayed alternately, until break of day, when we started on our journey. We had a glorious time, all feeling happy in the love of God. That, I believe, was the only camp-meeting held in Louisiana. We got in the skiff on the lake shore, within a few steps of where I got in a skiff to run the blockade, and get out of the Confederacy six years before. At Brashear we found Jack Moore and several other Republicans, who dare not go their homes.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

SHOOTING IN THE THIRD DISTRICT.—Mrs. Honora Nichols. P. Jones and J. Brown were wounded Saturday evening, between nine and ten o'clock, not dangerously, however. J. Dietz, charged with the accidental shooting, was arrested.

BUSINESS BEFORE DEATH.—Last Friday morning, at half-past three o'clock, Alexander Droz died at his residence on Clara, near Cypress street. His wife went to the market to sell bread as usual and did not mention the death of her husband till one o'clock in the afternoon. The husband and wife owned property to the value of $10,000 and there having been some misunderstanding between them, Coroner Roche had the body disintered to ascertain whether the husband came to his death by other than natural causes.

TOO MUCH POWDER.—About half-past four o'clock yesterday afternoon a colored man was walking along Liberty street from Common when he was met, between Common and Gasquet streets, by two white men, apparently intexicated, who struck him as he passed and knocked his hat off. As the colored man was trying to pick up his hat he was again assaulted. He then started to run when one of the party stooped to pick up a rock to throw at the colored man, while the other followed and drew a pistol and fired at the fleeing man. The pistol being overcharged exploded in the hands of the man who was indulging in the favorite sport of "shooting a nigger," and his wrist and hand were very badly injured. The colored man escaped with a slight wound on the head.

DEATHS LAST WEEK.—The total number of interments in New Orleans last week, as reported by Dr. G. W. Dirmeyer, Secretary of the Board of Health, was 119, of which 10 died of gunshot wounds, 6 from other wounds, 1 drowned, 3 lockjaw, 5 congestion of the brain, 9 consumption, 3 fever, 1 billious, 1 congestive, 1 nervous, 1 remittent, 1 typhoid fever, 2 heart disease, 1 old age, 2 pneumonia, 2 typhoid pneumonia, 2 premature birth, 12 still born, and the balance of various ordinary diseases. 71 were males, 45 females, and 3 not stated. Eighty were whites, 27 blacks, 12 mulattoes; 72 were natives of the United States, 17 not stated, and 30 were foreigners; 49 were children under 10 years, 3 between 10 and 15, 6 between 15 and 20, 9 between 20 and 30, 14 between 30 and 40, 10 between 40 and 50, 11 between 50 and 60, 7 between 60 and 70, 1 between 70 and 80, 3 between 80 and 90, 1 between 90 and 100 and 5 whose ages were not reported.

General Steedman having resigned the office of Chief of police, Captain Cain has been appointed thereto by the Police Commissioners.

KILLED AND WOUNDED.—Ten colored men were killed outright last week, or died from the effects of gunshot wounds. Inquests have been held also on the bodies of five white men. We have not heard that any of them were killed by their political opponents, the Radicals.

LAWLESSNESS IN THE THIRD DISTRICT.—A note from Mr. A. L. Bovee informs us that Sunday night about half-past eleven o'clock, a body of twenty-five or thirty armed men visited his residence corner of Craps and Union streets. Mr. Bovee was absent at the time, but half a dozen of his friends, formerly of the Eighty-first Regiment, were there on watch, prepared to give invaders and aggressors a warm reception. Entering one room and finding that there were private watchmen in the next room, the invaders departed.

ALL SAINTS' DAY, which it is said derives its name from the time set apart during the fourth century, for commemorating the virtues of those, to whom no special day had been set apart in the calendar, was appropriately observed on Sunday last, the first instant. The cemeteries were crowded with visitors, the tombs were beautifully decorated, and the day was as beautiful as could be desired.

All Souls' Day, the second, was likewise observed according to the usual custom.

THE WEATHER.—On Tuesday, the thirtieth ultimo, the thermometer, a great part of the day, stood at eighty degrees; on Saturday it rose only to seventy; Sunday morning the first, fifty-seven; it rose, however, during the day to about sixty-five; Monday at six o'clock fifty-two degrees, at nine o'clock sixty; at three o'clock sixty-three; at 6 P. M., sixty-five degrses. On Tuesday and Wednesday the weather was a little warmer than on Monday.

REGISTRATION OFFICE BROKEN INTO.—The First Ward Registration office was broken open last night and books and papers destroyed. The Supervisors of Registration had obtained several affidavits relating to the acts of parties who have stolen registration certificates from colored men, a matter which they had industriously investigated during the past week. All of these affidavits, except one, were carried off, and as the list of registered voters will be prepared, these stolen certificates of registration will now be used by men who are not entitled to them. It was undoubtedly solely for the purpose of obtaining possession of the affidavits referred to that the registratin office was forcibly entered.

QUIET IN NEW ORLEANS.—The negroes were so intimidated by the murders, and violence, and threats of extermination for the last few weeks, that most of them stayed in doors on election day. Few attempted to go out to work. Voting was not thought of. No row, therefore, could be raised, and as the stores, coffeehouses, etc., were closed, we have no hesitation in saying that election day was the quietest New Orleans has known in a score of years, Sundays not excepted.

In the afternoon we think colored men could have gone to the polls and voted without molestation. At least many would have been allowed to vote, as what would come then, would probably not change the result of the election. The Democrats saw too, that they had carried their violence and threats too far, and feared that the vote would all go for nothing, and were rather desirous, late in the day, that the Radical party should cast some votes, so that the election might have the appearance of being legal.

STATE ELECTIONS.—The Ku-Klux and other organizations, by threats of death, etc., broke up the Republican organizations in many parishes, long before election day. The leaders were made to join Democratic organizations or pledge themselves not to vote, in order to save their lives. No Republican ticket, therefore, was run in many parishes. Consequently the State has gone overwhelmingly Democratic. The returns have not yet come in. In the city the vote as near as we can ascertain, stood as follows: For Electors, Democrat, 23,510; Republican, 270. For members of Congress: First District, Democrat, 10,884; Republican, 107. Second District, Democrat, 12,835; Republican, 162. Third District, Democrat, 12,835; Republican 159.

THREATENING THE BLACKS WITH EXTERMINATION.—Among the wild threats made by the negro's "best friends" previous to election, to keep him from the polls, is that of a general massacre of those who presented themselves, and in fact, of extermination. A barbecue was held at Covington, in this State, when, according to the Crescent, the following was delivered:

"E. John Ellis, Esq., alternate for the State at large, closed the programme of the day in a brief but eloquent address. The greater portion of his speech was directed to the colored people who were present. He counseled them to turn from the errors of their way, and cease from arraying themselves in hostility to the whites. He assured them that the Democratic party would protect them in all their personal rights, and warned them not to consummate their own ruin by seeking to rule the whites. Said he: 'You may not heed this counsel now. If you do not, if you continue to listen to the false counsels of the bad men who are corrupting you and rending with curses away the ties that once bound you to our hearts, then read your speedy doom in yonder falling leaf, read it in the foam that caps the wave, and then is forever dashed to nothingness, and in yonder setting sun, only to your race there will come no rising on the morrow.'"

Last Saturday, in the editorial columns of the Morning Star, the Catholic organ of this city, we find the following, in reference to hunting down runaway negroes:

We do not know of any actual occurrence of the ruthless character referred to, but many persons seemed to think at one time that a movement of extermination might be expected at any moment. It may be remarked that in periods of excitement the calmest and most humane men sometimes catch the pervading influence, and applaud acts which they would never dream of perpetrating. We have heard discreet, benevolent and even pious persons contend quite gravely that a just idea of self-defense included the plan of putting the dangerous element out of existence, and that, too, even if the process should involve some innocent persons. Yet these same men would deprive themselves of comforts to relieve a suffering negro.

This shows how widespread was the feeling of hatred toward the colored people. Even those who were "discreet, benevolent and even pious persons" contended "gravely" of "putting the dangerous element out of existence." It can be imagined how fearful was the reign of terror here, when respectable people even talked in favor of exterminating negroes and "carpet-baggers." And when people were shot down in cold blood on the streets, when the air seemed filled with the wildest rumors of a universal massacre, and for secret assassination.

DEMOCRATIC PROGRAMME.—On the matter of the Democrats (so-called) guarding the polls and preventing the negroes from voting, a reliable acquaintance of ours, heard the following conversation on Canal street, Monday evening:

First Democrat—What polls are you to guard?

Second Demecrat—I don't know; I am to receive my orders to-night at the meeting.

Second Democrat—Are any niggers to be allowed to vote?

First Democrat—No, sir! The first nigger that attempts it will get shot down at our polls.

OFFICE OF THE LIEUTENANT OF POLICE,
First District,
New Orleans, August 27, 1868.

To the Hon. J. R. Conway, Mayor of New Orleans:

DEAR SIR—The undersigned having been appointed a committee by their brother officers, at a meeting held for that purpose, beg to present to you a statement of their peculiar condition, and the sufferings they have been compelled to endure by reason of the non-payment of their wages by the city; and to ask from you such aid in procuring for them relief as your official position enables you to accomplish. It has been repeatedly asserted that many of the police officers were suffering for the necessaries of life; but it is not believed that the city officials are aware of the wide-spread and general destitution that actually prevails among us. Certainly they are not aware that many, very many are without means to procure the commonest necessaries of life, and that their families are in absolute want, or the impulse of common humanity would move them to the adoption of some measures for our relief. Yet such is the case. For months our children have been crying for bread, and without relieving we have only been enabled to protract the agonies of starvation. Our best officers have been reduced to beggary and to solicit from the charitable, whose residences they guarded, bread to take home to their families. In one instance a child of a good and faithful officer died from the effects of hunger and unwholesome and insufficient food. Sickness has prostrated the families of many, and they are without means to procure medicines or the attendance of a physician. Hopeless and despairing, they have appealed to their friends in vain. All are alike destitute and without the means of support. Our employment prevents our engaging in other pursuits, even if remunerative work was to be obtained, and now, with months of unliquidated dues owing to us from the city, we come to you, appealing for a redress of our grievances and a liquidation of our claims. It is not charity we ask, but the honest reward of labor faithfully performed. Not for ourselves alone, but the helpless dependent upon our exertions and who look to us for support. It is no fancy picture of imaginary distress, but an actual fact, a fact that could stir sympathetic emotions in every honest heart. We have borne up under repeated disappointments; we have struggled and hoped against hope; but we can do so no longer. Gaunt want stares us in the face, our families starving, in many instances shelterless, we appeal to the magnanimity of the city we serve for an alleviation of our distress. To you, as to one in whom we might hope to find a friend, we have submitted this appeal, and ask your intercession with the Honorable Common Council for relief.

With great respect for you personally, we subscribe ourselves your obedient servants,

THOS. H. CUMMINGS,
Clerk Central Police Station.
J. A. McMANUS,
Sergeant Fourth District Police.
JAMES GIBNEY,
Sergeant First District.
JAMES DORSEY,

REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

The Committees of Elections and Qualifications submitted the following majority and minority reports:

To the Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, State of Louisiana:

The undersigned, Committee on Elections and Qualifications, do report that in the case of the parish of Franklin, wherein Isaac H. Crawford contests the seat of John C. Humble as Representative of said parish, after careful investigation and deliberation, we find that the evidence presented clearly establishes the fact that intimidation, fraud and violence were used in said parish on the seventeenth and eighteenth days of April last past.

That not one-half of the total number of registered voters in said parish made use of their privilege to vote.

That more than two-thirds of the newly enfranchised voters refrained from voting; that they are extremely jealous of their rights, particularly that of the franchise, and will use every means in their power to exercise that right, and will only refrain when force, violence and intimidation are used against them; that the affidavits filed as rebutting evidence are sworn to before the Clerk of the Court of said parish, and the seal of said parish court is one unknown in any other portion of the State, said seal being that of the so-called Confederate States, with the Confederate flag in the centre.

Wherefore, the premises considered, your committee feel justified in reporting in favor of the contestant, Isaac H. Crawford, and recommend that he be allowed to take his seat as representative of the parish of Franklin.

P. JONES YORKE,
Chairman;
JAMES. S. MATHEWS,
HARRY LOTT,
DENNIS BURREL,
F. C. ANTOINE,

To the Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives or the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Elections and Qualifications, report to your honorably body that in the case of the parish of Franklin, where Isaac H. Crawford contests the seat of John C. Humble, as Representative: that a considerable portion of the evidence offered by the contestant to show violence and intimidation, and in fact all the evidence offered which tends to show violence and force, is given hearsay; and as such inadmissable in all the courts of the country; that in our opinion it should be rejected for those reasons on file in the case. It is proved that all parties came to the polls armed, and people generally go armed in that part of the State. There is no legal evidence to show that force or intimidation or fraud were used on either of said election days; or that any one desiring to vote could not have done so, and voted for whom they pleased.

The evidence shows that two colored voters came to the polls armed and voted openly the Republican ticket without molestation in any way, and that at the precinct compained of; and they swear they saw no violence or heard no threats. That there being no evidence of violence, fraud, or intimidation in said election, we, the undersigned, recommend that John C. Humble be declared entitled to his seat and allowed to take the same.

Respectfully submitted, etc.
JAMES McCULLEN.

Mr. Mathews, of Tensas, moved to adopt the majority report.

Carried.

The majority report was adopted, and Mr. Crawford, on motion of Mr. Gray, of St. James, was sworn in by the Speaker and admitted to his seat.

The Committee on Elections and Qualifications submitted the following majority and minority reports:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Room of Committee on Elections and Qualifications, New Orleans, August 28, 1868.

To Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana:

GENTLEMEN—The undersigned, members of the Committee on Elections and Qualifications, beg leave to submit the following report in the case of Michael Casey vs. J. N. Judice, of the parish of Lafayette. Michael Casey contests the seat of J. N. Judice on the grounds of ineligibility and fraud.

The charge of ineligibility is not sustained.

The charge of fraud is not fully sustained on account of the contestant not being able to procure evidence in his parish for fear of losing his life, he having been threatened, and was driven out of his parish.

The undersigned are satisfied that gross frauds were committed in the parish of Lafayette during the days of election, the seventeenth and eighteenth days of April, 1868.

The official promulgation of the result of the election shows that J. N. Judice received 788 votes, and Michael Casey 737 votes, giving J. N. Judice a majority of 51 votes.

The undersigned believe that had the election been conducted in a fair and impartial manner, Michael Casey would have received a majority of the votes cast, and recommend that the said Michael Casey be allowed to take his seat as Representative of the parish of Lafayette.

Respectfully,
P. JONES YORKE,
Chairman;
HARRY LOTT,
DENNIS BURREL,
JAMES S. MATHEWS,
F. C. ANTOINE.

To the Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives:

The undersigned, members of the Committee on Elections and Qualifications, respectfully represent to your honorable body that, after consideration of the contestation of the parish of Lafayette, wherein Michael Casey contested the seat of J. N. Judice, they do report that said Casey has not produced sufficient evidence to justify your committee in reporting in his favor; and we also recommend that J. N. Judice be confirmed in his seat as Representative from the parish of Lafayette.

To the Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information and action of the General Assembly, a copy of a letter addressed to me by P. Fishburn, President of the Board of Administrators of the Insane Asylum at Jackson.

Honorable H. C. Warmoth, Governor of Louisiana:

SIR—As President of the Board of Administrators of this institution I deem it my duty to state a dilemma in which I find myself placed, and to solicit your advice in the matter. By military order the legislative provision made for the asylum for the year 1867, was extended to the year 1868, and under sanction of that order, I drew on the State Treasury for means of subsistence up to first July, ultimo, the close of the second quarter. But the State having passed from under military rule, the question now presents itself whether or not the order referred to has yet operation. If you entertain the opinion that it is yet in force, be pleased so to signify to me, but if not, I respectfully suggest the propriety of your inviting the prompt attention of the Legislature to the need of providing for the wants of the Asylum. We have means sufficient to pay current charges up to the close of the present (third) quarter, and have on hand bacon and barreled pork sufficient to last the year out, and all the winter clothing of the patients or material for it, providing some flannels, shoes, and hats are provided; but on first October we shall need funds to pay salaries and wages of present quarter, and to replenish our stock of coffee, sugar, rice, etc.; as also to meet engagements with the baker and the butcher.

You will no doubt be pleased to learn that all in the Asylum, patients as well as officers and attendants, are free from acute diseases. All told they number one hundred and eighty adults, and one infant; and there is not a present case of acute indisposition.

Very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
P. FISHBURN,
President Board Administration.

The report was referred to the Committee on Charitable and Public Institutions.

(Signed) THOMAS MARKEY,

Approved August 29, 1868.
(Signed) JOHN R. CONWAY,

A true copy:
JOHN W. OVERALL, Secretary.

OFFICE OF THE LIEUTENANT OF POLICE,
First District, New Orleans, August 27, 1868.

To the Hon. John R. Conway, Mayor of New Orleans:

DEAR SIR—The undersigned having been appointed a committee by their brother officers, at a meeting held for that purpose, beg to present to you a statement of their pecuniary condition, and the sufferings they have been compelled to endure, by reason of the non-payment of their wages, by the city, and to ask from you such aid in procuring for them relief as your official position enables you to accomplish. It has been repeatedly asserted that many of the police officers were suffering for the necessaries of life, but it is not believed that the city officials are aware of the wide-spread and general destitution that actually prevails among us. Certainly they are not aware that many, very many are without the means to procure the commonest necessaries of life, and that their families are in absolute want, or the impulses of common humanity would move them to the adoption of some measures for our relief. Yet such is the case!

For months our children have been crying for bread, and without relieving we have only been enabled to protract the agonies of starvation. Our best officers have been reduced to beggary, and to solicit from the charitable whose residences they guarded, bread to take home to their families. In one instance a child of a good and faithful officer died from the effects of hunger, and unwholesome and insufficient food. Sickness has prostrated the families of many, and they are without the means to procure medicines, or the attendance of a physician. Hopeless and despairing, they have appealed to their friends in vain. All are alike destitute—all equally without means of support. Our employment prevents our engaging in other pursuits, even if remunerative work was to be obtained; and now, with months of unliquidated dues owing to us from the city, we come to you appealing for a redress of our grievances and a liquidation of our claims. It is not charity we ask, but the honest reward of labor faithfully performed. Not for ourselves alone, but the helpless dependent upon our exertions, and who look to us for support.

It is no fancy picture of imaginary distress, but an actual fact—a fact that could stir sympathetic emotions in every honest breast. We have borne up under repeated disappointments—we have struggled and hoped against hope, but we can do so no longer.

Gaunt want stares us in the face; our families starving, in many instances shelterless, we appeal to the magnanimity of the city we serve for an alleviation of our distress. To you, as to one in whom we might hope to find a friend, we have submitted this appeal, and ask your intercession with the Honorable Council for relief.

With great respect for you, personally, we subscribe ourselves your obedient servants,

THOS. H. CUMMINGS,
Clerk Central Police Station.
JAMES GIBNEY,
Sergeant First District.
JAMES DORSEY,
Sergeant First District.
EDWARD HARKING,
Sergeant Fourth District.
ROBERT BARRY,
Corporal First District.
EDWARD FLOOD,
Corporal First District.
J. A. McMANUS,
Sergeant Fourth District.

NEW ORLEANS, La., August 10, 1868.

To the Honorable Speaker and House of Representatives and Members in General Assembly convened:

GENTLEMEN—We, the undersigned policemen, on detail at the Senate and House of Representatives, do respectfully ask, as a special request, that an appropriation be granted, at the option of your honorable body, to the undersigned police; as they have been for several months without the means of procuring the necessaries of life, and see no prospects of pay in the Police Department.

We, the undersigned policemen, do furthermore ask of your honorable body that if such appropriation do not be granted to us, we ask that a loan be granted us, and for such we are all agreeable to have the said amount deducted from our salary, etc.

We remain, gentlemen,
Your obedient servants,
CORPORAL WM. POSTRICK.

Poetry.

THE MOUNTAINS OF LIFE.

BY JAMES G. CLARK.

There's a land far away 'mid the stars we are told,
Where they know not the sorrows of time.
Where the pure waters wander through valleys of gold,
And life is a treasure sublime.
'Tis the land of our God, 'tis the home of the soul,
Where the ages of splendor eternally roll,
And the way weary traveler reaches his goal,
On the evergreen mountains of life.

Our gaze can not soar to that beautiful land,
But our visions have told of its bliss;
And our souls by the gales from its gardens are fanned,
When we faint in the deserts of this.
And we sometimes have longed for its holy repose,
When our spirits were torn with temptations and woes,
And we've drank from the tide of the river that flows,
From the evergreen mountains of life.

O! the stars never tread the blue heavens at night,
But we think where the ransomed have trod.
And the day never shines from his palace of light,
But we feel the bright smile of our God.
We've traveling homeward through changes and gloom,
To a Kingdom where pleasures eternally bloom,
And our guide is the glory that shines through the tomb,
From the evergreen mountains of life.

FOR YOU.

A thought! a thought? for the rosy morn
That comes through the gates of dew!
But I'll keep a kinder, happier thought
For twilight and for you.

A word! a word! for the humming bird,
A tilt for the jessamine new!
Will my lip let slip, but my heart will keep
Its softest words for you.

A song! a song! for the mocking bird,
In answer to his so true!
But you know right well I will always keep
My sweetest song for you.

A kiss! a kiss! for the sweet red rose,
And one for the violet blue!
But standing here at the garden gate
I'll keep back one for you.

A sigh! a sigh! for my pale white rose,
That the chilly night wind slew!
But I answer you when the lilies say—
I am sighing most for you!

Walking in the Light.

BY REV. E. DAVIES.

All nations are mightily affected by the nature of the gods they worship, and as man has a religious instinct, we find men everywhere inclined to worship, and this instinct, associated with his depravity, has led him to make to himself gods, whose natures were base, and whose adoration was debasing, so that every weaker passion of the human soul has been gratified in the worship of these idol gods. But in the Bible alone we may look for a true revelation of the living God; here his nature and attributes are set forth. Mark the excellence of his nature, so pure, so simple, so lovely, so immaterial, that the clearest light is an emblem that serves to convey some true idea of him. "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all," "He is self-active, uncompounded spirituality, the source of wisdom, holiness, happiness and glory. Light is the purest, most subtle, the most useful and the most diffusive of all God's creatures, and is a proper emblem of himself." God is to the human soul what light is to the world; without light all would be dismal and uncomfortable, and terror and death would everywhere prevail. What is religion without an indwelling God, without his penetrating light? 'Tis but an empty science, a dead letter, and the soul a trackless wilderness. But hallelujah! God is light, and his sacred rays illuminate the dark avenues of our nature.

Light is the emblem of perfection and excellence, and God is infinitely perfect and gloriously excellent, and has no mutability or possible decay.

Light is the emblem of purity, and God is infinitely pure, without any possible stain of moral pollution. So pure that his jealousy and justice burn continually against sin.

Mark the conclusion that naturally follows. If we say we have known a fellowship or communion with Him who is all light, and still walk in darkness, if we say that we have a participation of the nature of him who is all purity and still live in sin, we lie; we belie God and ourselves, and our profession is in vain. "If we walk in the light or live in purity, as he is in the light, that is wholly and constantly, we have fellowship one with another." We all receive the same holy light, we blend in communion as the rays of the natural sun, and so we become the light of the moral world. Then we all and each have communion with God, we become deeply experienced in the things of God. "God and the holy soul are in constant correspondence." Thomas Walsh, John Fletcher and Edward Payson were blessed examples.

The last glorious result of this fellowship is "The blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth," bless God in the present time, "cleanseth us from all sin." So long as we continue our fellowship with God, his precious blood purges every stain, removes every blot.

And cleanse and keep me clean."

Dear reader! hast thou ever enjoyed this communion with God? Dost thou walk in the light as God is in the light, and dost thou now feel that the blood of Jesus Christ his Son, cleanseth you from all sin?

Galveston Correspondence.

Our little city is quiet, politically and religiously, but in a business point of view, all astir.

We think the great contest is ended, and our rival at the other end of the "ship channel" has concluded that it is useless to compete with us farther. The yellow fever of last year, followed by the destructive hurricane in which our citizens were hurried to their tombs and property destroyed by the millions, gave them some hope in the race, and it was quite frequent to hear of our sinking island and the vast dimensions of their city. But we are afraid that Houston has already arrived at its zenith, while Galveston is but in its infancy.

Cotton is coming into the city quite briskly, and our merchants are preparing for a heavy trade this winter.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South are preparing to build a new church shortly, and the Africans have just closed their Annual Conference here, Bishop Shorter presiding.

As heretofore, our church received its usual amount of censure, and what is more lamentable than all else, is the misrepresentations made by their leading minds. To see such men as Shorter stand before a congregation of colored people, in a church he holds only by suffrage, and that, too, to the detriment of a loyal organization, and declare that the last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Chicago, refused to treat kindly the representatives of the African Zion Church, and that one of our Bishops had publicly announced himself as being favorable to a great nationality of negroes being formed on the Rio Grande, with general oversight by the United States Government—is simply ridiculous, and tends to shake confidence in a church organization controlled by such men.

We will have no election in this State, consequently no unusual trouble. We pity and pray for Louisiana, and think it better to be unreconstructed than in your condition. Our Free Man's Press proves a humbug. The editor has borrowed all the money from the friends here he can get, has got out two sickly issues of his paper, and left us without saying whether or not he will ever return. X. Y. Z.

Have Faith.

The most weakening of temptations is loss of faith. If the enemy can touch that spinal chord of the Christian he is paralyzed. Jacob wrestling with the angel, had but a physical ligament affected, and he limped all his life afterward. The believer wrestles with principalities and powers, with the ruler of this world, who seeks not by any touch of an outward cord to teach him his dependence on a diabolical power, but by paralysis of the soul, to cast him utterly into his satanic arms. This paralysis is unbelief. The Savior saw this, and, therefore, constantly warned and rebuked his disciples for any tendency in this direction. The apostles perceived it, and preached most unwearyingly this vital necessity. Faith is the substance of hope, the certainty of the unseen. Without faith it is impossible to please God. To every disciple, therefore, comes with divinest authority the command, "Believe!" More believe, for your personal comfort and strength. Doubt not the presence of the Holy Ghost to convict and convert sinners. Let no minister of the cross allow coldness, conflict, or any impediment in himself or his people, make him disbelieve the presence and power of Christ his Lord. His own depression can not depress the Savior. When the prophets sunk in despair, God's animating voice reassured them. So will it always be with his priests and prophets to-day. The very moment of their darkness is often the chosen hour for the most glorious display of the grace of God. The chariots would not have been seen by Elisha, had not unusual weakness and fear encompassed him. The presence of God to Elijah was at the weakest moment of his life—a fugitive, alone, with not even a servant or associate. So the most discouraged pastor should cast himself in that hour the most perfectly upon God. Light will break forth from the darkness, salvation from seemingly universal apostacy.

Let not then this subtlest trick of Satan decieve and subdue any trusting heart. He puffs up with conceit his friends. He seeks to suppress with distrust the friends of Christ. Against the former, every one not a true disciple should beware; against the latter, every redeemed one should be watchful. Have faith—faith the illuminator, the encourager, the strengthener; faith which brings the soul into oneness with God, which laughs to scorn the cruel power of the enemy, which wrests victory from the grasp of the seeming victor, and makes Winchester out of every Bull Run. Have faith.—Zion's Herald.

Odd Epitaphs.

The following affecting lines may be found upon a tombstone in Connecticut:

Here lies, cut down like unripe fruit,
The wife of Deacon Amos Shute;
She died of drinking too much coffee,
Anny Dominy eighteen forty.

Here is an epitaph, copied from a tombstone in an English churchyard:

Here lies the body of Thomas Smith,
And what is somewhat rareish,
He was born, bred and hanged in this parish.

In the same churchyard:

Here lies the wife of Roger Martin
She was a good wife to Roger, that's sartain,
The manner of her death was thus,
She was druv over by a bus.

Another:

Here lies I, no wonder I'se dead,
For a broad wheel wagon went over my head.

There is something quaint and touching in this epitaph of Grimaldi, the distinguished clown:

Here I am.

The following may be found in Wake county, North Carolina:

Here lies James Dodge, who dodged all good,
And never dodged an evil;
And after dodging all he could,
He could not dodge the devil.

The following lines were inscribed on the tomb of a corpulent chandler:

Here lies in earth an honest fellow,
Who died by fat and lived by tallow,

On an aeronaut:

I shall rise again.

Here is one at Westminster:

You who stand around my grave,
And say "His life is done,"
You are mistaken—pardon me!
My life is but begun.

Here is one on the gravestone of a distinguished citizen of Texas:

He remained to the last a decided freind and supporter of Democratic principles and measures. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.

On a man who was killed by hitting his head against a pump:

Here lies John Adams, who received a thump
Right on the forehead from the parish pump,
Which gave him the quietus in the end,
For many doctors did his case attend.

The following inscription was found on the head board of a grave in the Sparta diggings, California:

In memory of John Smith, who met with wfelent death neer this spot 18 hundred and 40 too. He was shot by his own pistill. It was not one of the new kind but a old fasherned brass barrel, and of such is the Kingdom of Heaven.

In a graveyard in Texas there is a tombstone whereon is inscribed the following:

She lived a life of virtue and died of Cholera morbus, caused by eating green fruit,
In the full hope of a blessed immortality,
At the early age of twenty-four.
Reader go thou and do likewise.

The following is a Spanish epitaph upon a young girl who died broken-hearted:

She who lies beneath this stone
Died of constancy alone.
Fear not, approach, oh! passer-by—
Of naught contagious did she die.
—Home Journal.

We have copied some epitaphs in our travels, which we think equal the above.

In one of the cemeteries of this city, New Orleans, is the following, spelled and punctuated as here given:

O husband dear do pray for me, as your now, so wasnt was I, and as I am now so you shall be prepared for death, and follow me; where we will meet on the Heavenly shore;
there we meet to part no more.

In New York, we copied the following from a tombstone:

In memory of Captain James Lacen.
April 14, 1796.
"Though Boreas blasts and boisterous Waves have tossed me to and fro.
In spight of both you plainly see
I harbor here below.

Where safe at anchor though I ride with many of our fleet,
Yet once again I must set sail
My Admiral Christ to meet."

But the greatest piece of "doggerel" rhyme we have ever met, we copied from a monument in Jacksonville, Florida. It is said that the old lady composed it herself before her death. It is as follows:

When I am dead and laid in my grave,
And my bones they are all rotten,
When this you see remember me,
That I may not be forgotten.

The same publishers have also just announced a new edition of Dr. J. P. Newman's agreeable and readable run throuh Palestine, "From Dan to Beersheba." It is easy, yet instructive, and contains one of the best maps of the country.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

John Street Centenary Anniversary.

The one hundredth anniversary of John street Methodist Episcopal Church in this city was celebrated on Sunday last. Special services were held with brief intervals throughout the day. The congregations crowded the church to its fullest capacity. Over fifty ministers were present; several of them former pastors of the church, or Presiding Elders of the district. Many of the old laity of the church, whose homes have more recently been cast elsewhere, returned to worship around the old altar, and to participate in the reunion services.

At 9 A. M. a love-feast was held, conducted by Rev. Hart F. Pease, Presiding Elder of the district. The season was one of precious testimonies and of extraordinary interest. Among those who spoke were Rev. John Seyes, United States Consul to Liberia, President Roberts, of the Republic of Liberia, Dr. Jesse T. Peck and Rev. W. H. Norris. The old members of both sexes participated, in some instances several rising to their feet at the same time. Among those present at the love-feast and at the other services during the day were Philip and Augustus Embury, nephews of Philip Embury, the builder and first pastor of the church, and Jonathon P. Hick, great grandson of Barbara Hick. Many were there who more than half a century ago were members of the church or congregation.

The more public services opened at ten o'clock A. M. Programme of the exercises, containing the hymns to be sung during the day, had been distributed through the congregation. Rev. Dr. Holdich, one of the secretaries of the American Bible Society, read the first hymn, a most beautiful one, written for the occasion by Fanny Crosby, the blind poetess, (author of "Sweet Hour of Prayer," and many other precious hymns), and now a member of the John-street church. Rev. John Seyes led in prayer; the Scripture lessons were read by the venerable Reuben Reynolds of the Central New York Conference; the second hymn by Rev. H. F. Pease. The pastor of the church then read the following historic notes:

We meet to-day to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the dedication of this church, the first dedication having taken place on the last Sunday in October, 1768. Previous to that date the Methodist meetings (opened in the autumn of 1766) were held first in Philip Embury's private dwelling, located in what is now Park Place, and three months afterward in a larger rented room in that neighborhood, and still later in a rigging house in William street, the room being sixty by eighteen feet.

The site in John street at first consisted of two lots, each twenty-five by ninety-five feet. They were obtained on a lease from Mrs. Mary Barclay, widow of Rev. Henry Barclay, the second rector of Trinity Church. The lease bore date March 29, 1768, and was made to the first Board of Trustees, namely, Philip Embury, William Lupton, Charles White, Richard Souse, Henry Newton, Paul Hick, Thomas Taylor and Captain Thomas Webb.

The lease continued for over two years, when the lot was purchased for the sum of £600. The deed was dated November 2, 1770, and was made by Joseph Forbes (then owner) to Revs. Richard Boardman and Joseph Pilmoor, pastors; William Lupton, merchant; Thomas Webb, gentleman; John Southwell, merchant; Henry Newton, shopkeeper, and James Jarvis, hatter. On March 12, 1786, the trustees purchased other property adjoining the first lots.

On one of the original lots stood a small, plainly built frame dwelling, which for a long time after the completion of the church was occupied as a parsonage. It was located in part in front of the church.

The church edifice was first built of stone, and the front covered with a blue plaster, presenting the appearance of durability as well as of simplicity. Its dimensions were sixty by forty-two feet. There were galleries, but no stairs, the people ascending to them by means of ladders. For a considerable time even the seats in the lower floor were without backs. Of this first edifice Barbara Hick was the architect, (the plan, as she believed, having been impressed upon her mind in answer to prayer), and Philip Embury was the builder. The subscription list embraced the names of numerous persons outside of the congregation, some of them occupying prominent places in social life. Mr. John Wesley contributed fifty pounds toward the building fund. The exact cost is not known, but the early records show that the first subscriptions amounted to over £418, and that after August 1, 1769, and up to January 17, 1771, the treasurer received £733 toward paying for it.

The first edifice stood until May 13, 1817, when the walls were demolished and the corner-stone laid by Rev. Daniel Orstrander, pastor, for a larger and neater structure, which was dedicated by Rev. Nathan Bangs, January 4, 1818. The second edifice was sixty-two by eighty-seven feet, and cost about $30,000.

The present edifice was dedicated by Bishop Hedding, April 27, 1841. The dedication service of the first church on the last Sabbath in October, 1768, was conducted by Philip Embury, the first pastor, a local preacher, his text on the occasion being Hosea, x, 12: "Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy; break up your fallow ground; for it is time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you."

For a full hundred years the worship of God has continued at these altars; from this pulpit his word has been proclaimed and from this table the holy sacraments have been dispensed. On the first Sabbath of the new century we meet again. The memory of the fathers and of the "early times" is precious this day. The pastor and members of the church and congregation greet with a hearty welcome the former pastors, members and friends of this old and loved church. We all congratulate each other on the history of American Methodism. All our hearts go out in earnest, glowing thanksgivings to Him, "our Father," from whom alone "cometh every good and perfect gift."

The sermon of Bishop Janes was then announced. He had before him the identical Bible used by Embury in the first preaching services opened by him in New York and at the first dedication in John street. The Bishop preached from Psalm xxvi, 6-8: "I will wash my hands in innocency; so will I compass thine altar, O Lord: that I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works. Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house and the place where thine honor dwelleth."

At 2 P. M. the reunion services were opened. The first hymn was announced by the pastor; Rev. Rowland Hill Bourne, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, led in prayer; and Rev. Dr. Fitch Reed, of the Central New York Conference, read the second hymn. Bishop Janes presided, and after a few introductory remarks introduced Dr. Abel Stevens, who delivered an eloquent address.

President Roberts, of the Republic of Liberia, spoke next, making a happy address, which was heard with favor.

In the evening Dr. Jesse T. Peck, of Albany, preached.

During the evening services there stood upon the altar table lighted candles, supported by the identical candlesticks owned by Barbara Hick, and used by her in lighting the old church. They are now in the possession of Jonathan Paul Hick, of Mount Vernon, New York, and were kindly loaned by him for the anniversary occasion. Some of the early love-feast tickets were also present with other relics of the "early days." A friend in Brooklyn (whose name we have lost) presented the pastor, for the use of the church a large and neatly-turned match-safe, made from wood of the old "Rigging Loft." After the sermon, attention was called to the new and beautiful marble tablets placed conspicuously on the pilasters on the sides of the niche containing the pulpit platform and first uncovered at the present anniversary. One bore the following inscription:

In memory of Francis Asbury, the Pioneer Bishop of American Methodism, and the foremost among her tireless itinerants. He was born in England, August 30, 1745, entered the ministry at the age of seventeen, preached his first sermon in this church November 13, 1771, was ordained Bishop December 24, 1784, and died near Fredericksburg, Virginia, March 31, 1816. He ordained over 3000 preachers and preached over 17,000 sermons. Dying, he left the whole Church the legacy of his labors, patience, perseverance and love to God and man.

The other tablet bears the following:

In memory of Philip Embury and Barbara Hick. Born in Ireland, emigrants to New York, they organized the first Methodist society in America in 1766. Through their labors the first Methodist church was erected on this spot and dedicated by Embury, the first pastor, (also the first class leader and local preacher), October 30, 1768. "Their works do follow them." This tablet was raised in grateful memory of their piety, zeal and usefulness by the local preachers of New York and vicinity, on the occasion of the Centenary Anniversary, October, 1868.

The John street church has recently undergone extensive repairs and very important improvements. The total cost of these is about $3000, and this sum during the day was generously contributed by the congregations. Bishop Janes, Dr. Peck, President Roberts, Philip Embury, J. P. Hick, and other well-known names were among the contributors. The trustees, officers and members of the John street congregation, with their accustomed liberality, nobly led off in the list of donors. A large, superbly executed and elegantly-framed steel plate engraving of the first church edifice and parsonage was presented to the Church by the artist, Joseph B. Smith, son of Joseph Smith, Esq., one of the early trustees. Copies of this exquisite engraving may be obtained at the book room.

The whole anniversary exercises were a success. The blessing of God crowned the services, and the people departed to their homes with renewed thanksgiving for the precious inheritance enjoyed as the fruits of the great revival movement commenced in this country by Embury and his associates.

Sliding Down Hill.

BY HENRY WARD BEECHER.

There is nothing in the tropics that can console a man doomed to dwell there for the loss of northern winters. Monkeys and humming-birds, gorgeous flowers and gigantic vegetation, insects, reptiles and luscious fruits which you can not eat without a cholera; sweltering nights and roasting days! Deliver us from the intolerable delights of a tropical luxury.

But a northern winter is full of bracing joys. Indoors all is ruddy and social, and out-of-doors all is energy and manly joy! A man who has blood and vital spirit glories in the cold of winter. But of all sports, who can claim the superiority over coasting; or, as in our boyhood days it was called—sliding down hill?

Long before we attained the age of a sled, two barrel staves fastened together by the knowing workmen, served an excellent purpose, and required no mean skill in sitting and steering. A slight mistake in balancing, and the boy and staves changed places, the boy under and the sliding machine on top—and then gradually rolling into a promiscuous heap, out of which came some ripping remarks not made by the sled.

Next came the glory of full and real sledship—a sled with runners, and iron or steel shod; a sled painted and lettered. With that we defied the thermometer, and set our faces against the north wind. And how long the hill, a full half mile is sought, not all of a gentle slope, nor yet too steep, but properly made as all hills should be, wtih a fine gradual beginning, then a pitch quite steep, then another long middle slope, a jounce here and a rullock there, a sweep yonder around a point, and a fetching-up place right along the river! On such a hill-top with a glorious sled, well muffled and mittened, the boy seats himself on his sled, prouder than ever sat a king on a throne!

Away he goes, with nimble feet reaching out before him (for a sled carries its rudder at the bow), and whose heels with a skillful touch steer the flying machine. See him make a leap over the rullock, lifted clear into the air, and coming down with a jounce that makes everything crack! Boys have springs inside of them, under every muscle, on all sides of each bone, and come down with a springy bound, that cars and carriages may envy, but cannot hope to obtain!

None of your belly-flounders! This lying down on a sled, like a buckwheat cake on a griddle; or that sideway sitting on the hind end of it, with one leg corkscrewed out behind for steering, are not the thing. They are not orthodox. They savor of a compliance with weakness and timidity. A real boy should sit upon his sled fair and square, with his face to his work, and ready to meet all difficulties with his breast to them.

Nor let any one decry the long tramp up hill, that follows this fierce flight downward. What if it is long, the sled hanging behind, the way slippery, and withal some perils of those avalanches of other boys that come roaring and whirling down? The going up is still an indispensable part of the epic. It is the dark that gives power to the high light. The up makes, by contrast, the very glory of the down.

We never see the snow on the ground, old as we are, that we do not feel the very spirit of the sled again. And now, an old man, we would, if we could, mount and plunge down the hill again. Though a man's hair is as white as the snow under his feet, he need not be ashamed of a voyage on a sled!

One winter not long ago, when in New Bedford, we found a long street refused to horse vehicles, and set apart to sleds. The select-men, or whatever their names were, at the public expense, carted on snow where the track was worn; iced it by water thrown on over night; stationed a band of music there; had torches lit and placed along the sides; and the generous people, catching the spirit, illuminated their houses, and this preparation was thrown open to men, women and children. That city is civilized. That part of the millenium, which consists in sliding down hill, we believe will begin first in New Bedford.—Church Union.

Efficacy of Prayer.

(From the French of La Mennais.)

When you have prayed do you not feel your heart lighter and your soul more contented?

Prayer renders affliction less painful, and joy more pure; it blends with the one I know not what of strength and sweetness, and with the other a celestial perfume.

Why are you on the earth, and have you nothing to ask of him who put you here? You are a traveler who is seeking his country. Do not walk with downcast head; it is necessary that you raise your eyes that you may see your way. Your country it is heaven; and when you look at the heavens, is there nothing stirred within you? Do you feel no desire to press on in that direction, or is that desire dormant?

There are some who say, "Of what benefit is prayer?" "God is too far above us to listen to such pitiful creatures as we are." Who has given to them feeling, and thought, and speech, if it was not God? And if he has been so kind to them, was it to abandon them afterward and to thrust them from him?

Verily I tell you that whoever says in his heart that God despises his creatures, blasphemes the Creator.

There are others who say, "Of what benefit is it to pray to God? Does not God know better than we of what we have need?" God knows better than you what you have need of, and for that very reason wishes that you should ask it of him; for God is himself your first need, and to pray to God is to begin possessing him.

God knows the wants of his children; should they therefore never utter a word of prayer or of thanksgiving to their Father? When animals are in pain; when they are afraid, or when they are hungry, they raise plaintive cries to God. The cries are the prayers they address to God, and God listens to them. Should man then be the only being in creation whose voice never ascends to the ear of the Creator?

Sometimes a wind passes over the country, which parches the plants, and then their withered stems lean toward the earth; but moistened by the dew they regain their freshness once more, and hold up their laughing heads.—There are always burning winds that pass over the soul and parch it. Prayer is the dew that refreshes it.

Church South.

DR. D. R. MCANALLY.—From that excellent and well conducted paper, the Central Baptist, we gather the following surprising information:

The St. Louis Christian Advocate announces the retirement of Rev. D. R. McAnally from the editorial chair. In his valedictory he says:

I have resigned the position, office, emolument, duties, responsibilities, pains and pleasures of the editorship of this paper.

Whether this were done willingly or unwillingly, of choice or of necessity, on my own motion, or at the instance of others, does not matter. It has been done, and I did it.

It is with deep and painful regrets I take leave of the hundreds in Missouri and elsewhere from whom I have received so many marks of approval, commendation and encouragement.

If at any time during the long years I have continued here, I have wronged any one, it was unintentional, and now I sincerely ask for pardon, and those who may have wronged me, I freely forgive as I hope to be forgiven.

To my brethren of the press, from whom I have received much courtesy and kindness, I respectfully tender my sincerest thanks and best wishes.

Where I may go in the future, what I shall do, or what I shall be, doth not yet appear.

Dr. McAnally has had charge of the Advocate since 1851, has won for himself many friends in Missouri, and occupies a high position in the Methodist ranks.

REVIVALS.—From the Texas Christian Advocate, we learn that there are revivals at a number of appointments in that state.

Among the Germans at New Braunfels five were added to the church at the last quarterly meeting.

On Waxahachie charge nineteen were recently added to the church.

At Piney Grove and Plantersville twenty-four conversions each.

At Weatherford forty conversions, and thirty-four accessions to the church.

At Houston there has been about sixty conversions reported.

At a large meeting lately held at Grandview it was estimated that there were about seventy conversions.

On Dallas charge sixty-five conversions have been reported in the last five weeks.

At a great meeting on the Rockwall circuit one hundred conversions were reported in nine weeks.

The Presiding Elder of Sherman District reports 500 accessions to the church, during the past year.

At Wadeville twenty conversions are reported and at Resley's Creek eight conversions.

We truly rejoice with our Southern brethren in regard to this glorious news from Texas, of the increasing interest in our common Master's cause.

GRAND SYNAGOGUE.—The Jews are building in New York a fine synagogue. It covers four lots on the avenue, and runs back about 225 feet on Forty-third street, is nearly completed, and the builders expect to have it ready for occupancy in October. It will then be one of the most magnificent religious structures in the United States. It will cost over $1,000,000, and will seat between 3000 and 4000 persons. The ceiling is about seventy feet high, and together with the walls and filleting, is richly painted. The side towers, which rise on either side of the Fifth avenue entrance, will be 150 feet high. The Rev. Dr. Adler, the pastor, will be assisted in his ministrations by the Rev. James K. Gutheim, now of New Orleans. The congregation, "Emanuel" is one of the wealthiest in the city.

Mr. Campbell rose to a question of privilege, and said:

Mr. President: Some days since there appeared in the columns of the Democratic papers of the city, certain charges made against me by my Democratic competitor for a seat in this body. It was headed, I believe, "A Fugitive from Justice." From the time these charges were published until now I have remained silent and patiently waited until I should have the means of refuting them authoritatively. To-day I have received a copy of the principal paper published in the town in which I formerly resided and in the county in which the actions charged against me are said to have occurred. I wish, sir, as a matter of justice to myself, to send it to the desk and have it read.

The article was read as follows:

[From the Muscatine (Iowa) Journal.]

"We publish to-day a communication from Colonel H. J. Campbell, now a member of the Louisiana State Senate, refuting a malicious slander of the Courier, of this city. The communication is copied from the New Orleans Herald. It is only necessary for us to add that Colonel Campbell's sureties fully corroborate his statement of the circumstances, and entirely exonerate him from anything like criminality in or out of office. The fact is apparent to every unprejudiced mind that the venom of the Courier, in concocting and sending abroad its libelous statement, and the avidity with which rebel sheets in Louisiana take it up and circulate it is because Mr. Campbell was a soldier in the armies of the Union, and did what he could to put down Democratic treason and rebellion."

This is the essential part of the article alluded to:

The following are the facts: During the war, in which I enlisted on the side of the Union, I was wounded and returned home disabled. I was, while so disabled, elected Treasurer in my county for two years. After I had held that position eight months, I recovered my health and again raised a company for the war, and went out with the Eighteenth Iowa as its Major, resigning my office. My regiment, in one of sudden exigencies of the war, was hurried off to the front several weeks earlier than was anticipated, and before I had time to close the books and accounts of my office. I accompanied it upon the positive assurance of my commanding officer that when we arrived at our destination I should have a few days leave of absence to return and close my accounts. This promise, owing to certain movements which sent my command at once into a campaign, was not kept. I was refused leave of absence; was at once sent forward into an arduous and protracted campaign, and the accounts of my office were necessarily closed in my absence, bringing me, to my great astonishment and distress, several hundred dollars in debt to the county. With the greatest promptness, immediately upon receiving this information, I had my small property sold at a sacrifice, without reserve, and the proceeds handed over to my securities. When discharged from the service, I returned at once home and met my securities and creditors, paid so far as I was able the balance, arranging for the payment of the remainder, a few hundred dollars, as soon as I was able, and upon the terms proposed by all the parties interested. No charge was ever made against me of fraud or dishonesty. On the contrary, it was known that I had made every sacrifice to protect my securities against any loss resulting from what at the most was a perhaps too hasty and eager a desire to avail myself of what I then considered the last opportunity of volunteering in defense of what I esteemed a right and holy cause.

What I have suffered and lost has been like that of thousands of others on both sides in consequence of the late war. If it will gratify any to know that some opposed to them have suffered as well as they in the late strife, I am perfectly willing to afford them that gratification, knowing that in consideration of the facts, there are not wanting gentlemen who are willing to do justice in such a matter even to a political foe. Finally, I would say that I have the documents to prove my assertions, and I am willing to submit the charges against me to any number of my political opponents, selected by themselves, and if they do not acquit me of the accusations contained in the article, I pledge myself to resign my position as Senator.

Yours, etc.,
HUGH J. CAMPBELL.

The extract was ordered to be spread upon the minutes.

The Committee on Immigration submitted the following report, which was received and adopted:

ROOMS OF COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION,
New Orleans, La., September 7, 1868.

To the Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee, to whom was referred the annual report of J. C. Kathman, late Chief of the Bureau of Immigration, beg leave to submit the following report:

That, in the opinion of your committee, the continuance of the Bureau of Immigration has become a necessity in promoting and developing the agricultural resources of this State. The inducements held out to immigrants to settle in the Western and Northwestern States are of such character that a great majority of immigrants arriving at this port embark directly upon steamboats for St. Louis and other Western cities.

A mere glance at the central location, in a commercial point of view, the unsurpassed fertility of the soil, its many navigable water courses, and the ease with which artificial means of communication may be established, owing to the easy grade upon which railroads and canals may be constructed, will convince the most casual observer that Louisiana is unsurpassed in her agricultural and commercial advantages.

Your committee, after having read the annual report of the late Chief of the Bureau of Emigration, and carefully examined the books of the officer, would respectfully submit the accompanying bill for your earnest consideration.

Your committee would further suggest that an adequate appropriation be made by your honorable body to continue the functions of the Bureau for the current year.

HARRY LOTT,
Chairman Committee;
DANIEL YOUNG,
J. J. WALSH,
EMILE HONORE.

The bill as reported by the committee was, under a suspension of the rules, read twice and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Mr. Dewees, of Bienville, the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock M.

To Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives of the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana:

They report that Frank Borge, whose election as representative has been announced by the commander of the Fifth Military District, is disqualified from holding said office by reason of having been a registered enemy of the United States.

That article eighteen of the Constitution of the State of the State of Louisiana provides that "Every elector under this Constitution shall be eligible to a seat in the House of Representatives," yet Frank Borge has not produced evidence showing that he has complied with the conditions prescribed in article ninety-nine of the State Constitution, to wit: "That no person who, prior to the first of January, 1868, favored the execution of the laws of the United States, popularly known as the Reconstruction acts of Congress, and openly and actively assisted the loyal men of the State in their efforts to restore Louisiana to her position in the Union, shall be held to be included among those herein excepted," and hence was not an elector under the Constitution at the time of his election.

And they do further report that the contestant, Augustine Maurice, has not produced sufficient evidence of fraud to entitle him to a seat as Representative of the Eighth Representive District of the parish of Orleans.

The vote in the Eighth Representative District stood as follows:

|---|---|
| Frank Borge received | 974 votes |
| Augustin Maurice received | 628 votes |
| Majority for Borge | 346 votes |

Wherefore, the premises considered, we respectfully recommend that a new election be ordered in said Representative District.

Respectfully submitted,

P. JONES YORKE,
Chairman;

Nays: Alexander, Adolphe, Calhoun, Dupart, Guigonet, Garstkamp, Hill, Honore, Harper, Holland, Hall, Lott, Mahier, Raymond, Reese, Rey, Taylor, Umphreys, Washington, William C. Williams—20.

Revivals of Religion.

Seasons of revival in the church, are regarded by all good people as eminently desirable; they are "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord" and "days of the right hand of the most High." Every interest of value to the community then receives an onward impulse, while only those suffer which are corrupting to public morals and confessedly deleterious to society. The parasites who thrive upon the vices and weaknesses of their fellow-men, and lend themselves to the work of debasing humanity, destroying soul and body, are certain to rage like the idol-mongers of Ephesus, or hungry wolves whose prey is escaping them. Their value can only be understood by considering the necessities which call for them and the results usually obtained. What are called the ordinary means of grace or the common religious duties and services, in the nature of things, by habit come to lose their power. It is useless to say that christians ought to live each moment in the full emotional enjoyment of religion, to feel no langour in devotion or decrease of interest in religious exercises; the ideal christian is a rare, though a possible and blessed character; would they were more common; but like his less faithful brethren, he too desires and values these special, gracious seasons to enrich the soul and fit it for labors more abundant. In our frailness we all feel the need of outside, human help as well as the divine, so abundantly afforded at such times. Then the church, apt to be regarded by the world as merely human, or to be despised as effete and burdensome, needs this agency which enables her to rise up to the full stature of her supernatural character, commanding respect and securing reverence. No Christian church, be it ever so grand in its ceremonial, perfect in its ritual, correct in deportment or extensive in its works of benevolence can secure such profound deference from the wise and great, as even the humblest religious society, when enveloped in this cloud of the excellent glory. It is in this mount of transfiguration that the world recognizes her heavenly nature, and the saints exclaim in the ripeness of their faith: "It is good for us to be here."

It is fallacious also to argue that a revival should always exist. A continuous revival is a contradiction in terms; it is only in one of a hundred churches, and when in charge of some highly favored and richly endowed Pastor, that a condition of things at all analogous to a revival season is continuously enjoyed. And with all their boasted freedom from excitement and extravagance, they do not accomplish the good usually realized in the old fashioned awakening. Like nature, grace has its seasons; its planting, watering and gathering times. God is always able and willing to bless us. But order is heaven's first law, and in the beautiful symetry of His operations, fitness is ever regarded.

The results of genuine and wisely managed revivals demonstrate their value beyond cavil; church history is full of the wonders they have wrought; and no mightier or more beneficent agency has been employed on earth. Of the millions who will enter into the joy of their Lord, by far the greater number will be the fruits of revivals. Scores of young people, multitudes of idle hearers, scoffers and formalists, who go sabbath after sabbath to church unmoved, at such times are swept along by the tide; they feel the power of God's word, are emboldened by the examples before them, find faith easy and become happy christians. How hopefully then do pious parents bring to the sanctuary their precious children, and lay them at Jesus's feet. Whole families are then converted to God; men become ashamed of their evil courses; the moral tone of society is elevated, divine and human law is respected, honesty in business, kindness at home, benevolence to the poor; and best of all many a troubled believer is lifted [illegible] complainties or delivered out of [illegible] while the whole church [illegible] higher ground and becomes better prepared for its mission of love to the world.

But the most important part of our argument and perhaps the most difficult is this: By what means may we have a revival; is it for us and now? what shall we do? Its value is evident, the church needs it, and we are suffering personally every hour it is delayed. If these positions are taken by the members of any church, they are verily guilty if means are not at once employed to obtain this rich blessing. The minister can not alone do the work; a united, intelligent effort must be made by all who truly and earnestly desire the object. Waste no time then in vain attempts to make yourselves better, to become worthy of being used in such a divine business. Come together in counsel just as you are, talk and pray and sing definitely; without permitting any other question to divert the mind or occupy the time, in your prayer meeting or elsewhere, which has been set apart for this purpose.

No religious or secular duties need be neglected and no gloom or undue anxiety should be indulged; wait upon the Lord, wait patiently, even cheerfully; soon enough will the cross be felt, the pressure of Christ's burden, the fellowship of his sufferings and a true labor for souls be yours. If you are truly consecrated, walking in paths of righteousness, and faithfully praying for a revival; while united in this one purpose, can you doubt that God will hasten to pour out the spirit with power and in great abundance upon your church and community? Surely not, for He is more willing to give His Holy spirit to them that ask Him, than you are to give your children the good things they ask from you.

The wise minister will carefully watch and skillfully guide such a work from its beginning to its wane; for this is required of him by the great head of the church; he will encourage, instruct, restrain, rebuke with all long suffering; not sparing himself any toil and judiciously using all the talent at his disposal. Happy is such an one and happy are his people when the smiles of the master are upon them, as they gather in the precious harvest, and join with the new born in praises to Jesus who hath washed us with his blood; counting us worthy to be fellow-laborers with Him in the church militant and forever blessed with Him in the church triumphant.

"Avenge not Yourselves."

When reports of violence to Union men, especially to colored people, reach us from nearly every parish in the State, and from neighboring States also, we fear at times, knowing the promptings of the human heart, that revenge will be sought by those who have been so fearfully and brutally outraged. We therefore address a few words of advice to our thousands of colored friends and readers. Our advice in these trying times is comprised in those words of him who "spake as never man spoke," "Avenge not yourselves." "Vengeance is mine, I will repay saith the Lord." And yet you must not make it your hope that God will avenge your cause. "God's ways are not as man's ways." He, in executing his vengeance, may bring no personal injury to your enemies. He may forgive them, as he has forgiven you, a thousand times for wrong doing. His plan may be to let their own misdeeds result in advancing great Republican principles. The very thing they are endeavoring to oppose. And advance them more rapidly than they could possibly be forwarded without this opposition and persecution. Such has been the result of their doings in the past, such may be the result in the future. It is plain to see now, that "He hath made the wrath of man to praise him." You have only had to stand still and see the onward march of truth and justice.

You may say that it is difficult thus to forgive. You may say that your peace and order during the late war, and your kind treatment toward the families of your masters, when the latter were from home fighting to keep you enslaved, merit from them, something better than persecution and death. You may claim that you are peacable still, and that all the "negro insurrections" spoken of by your enemies, are false accusations, as is shown by the scores of your people that are slaughtered, and the occasional death only, among your enemies. Few will doubt your statements, or seek to depreciate your trials. Yet to suffer wrong without seeking revenge afterward, displays a spirit which under your circumstances, is well pleasing to God, and which awakens the keenest sympathies of the nation, thereby calling up a power in your defense, a thousand fold greater than you possess. You would be crushed—the nation can not be.

Suppose that instead of manifesting a forgiving spirit in the past, you had sought to avenge yourselves. The sympathy of the nation might not then have been awakened. It might even have turned against you. And then, few of the rights which you to-day possess, would you have known. Your unavenging spirit has really been your strongest defense. Your submission has resulted in your elevation. Even your most bitter persecutors will soon grow weary of persecuting, and yield you the same civil and political rights accorded to others.

It is hard to die by violence or to lose our friends thus. But life is short, at the longest, and if we fulfill our mission in a score or two of years, it is as well as to live on our three score years and ten. Let all know, whose friends, though innocent, have died by violence, that they have not died in vain. The news thereof has been published, and the nation has received a a greater impetus in the cause of universal liberty and justice. Retaliation on your part would now spoil all. The triumph of great principles; the benefiting of a whole race is something to beanxiously desired; mere personal revenge is a trifling matter, and betrays a mind and heart of small compass. For "anger (or revenge) resteth in the bosom of fools."

Seeing then, how abundantly patience and forbearance have brought you the favor of God and the sympathy of men in the past, again we say, "avenge not yourselves."

The Pro-Slavery Press.

The circulation of Southern Democratic journals at the North, has doubtless contributed very largely to the victory of the law and order party; no telegrams, speeches, or publications in the interest of Republicanism could possibly have done so much good, because they could only reach one class, and would naturally be regarded as interested. The city papers have been more cautious than their country cotemporaries, but all have been consistent in disclaiming allegiance to the laws of our general and State governments, and counseling or excusing every sort of resistance, and a resort even to the pistol and the knife, for the recovery of political power. It is not at all strange that so complete a work has been done in destroying Republican presses throughout the parishes breaking up political organizations and the expulsion or assassination of Republicans. No less could be expected from the compactness of the rebel organizations, the unscrupulousness of the leaders, the infamour character of their tools and the sympathy of the military with Democratic rule. Doubtless the result of the fall elections induced the desperate purpose to gain the State at all risks, in the prospect of losing the general government in November. These political gamesters staked their all, and seemed to have won; by outrage and blood; but they have gone too far, and theirs will be a fruitless victory. God and humanity have been outraged; and the nation emerging from the political campaign as it did from the war, will now have time, as it has ample means, to rebuke the crimes and confound the heresies of these enemies of freedom and obstacles to human progress. The victory is certain, whether in one or ten years; sacred liberty may be trampled and precious lives be sacrificed, but the prophetic ken discerns its approach and calmly waits its coming. "The workmen die, but the work goes on," and here as ever, "the martyr's blood is the seed of the church."

It is folly to give a moment's throught to the pratings about ignorant voters, corrupt legislation, mercenary rulers; they have always been and will be here and elsewhere; the trouble with our old slave communities is even deeper and stronger than that of office-seeking and love of political power; it arises from prejudice, born and bred of slavery, and pervades all classes of the Southern whites. It is blind, malignant, unreasoning. Priest and people, teachers and pupils, wise and simple, all are under the spell;; it is a darkness in which they must grope until the fulness of time; the only remedy is a gradual increase of light. Every freedman and every man who is in sympathy with freedom; those who have lived in free communities, and all such as are imbued with the spirit of justice; the liberals of both hemispheres; these compose the party of progress, and seek the elevation of the masses.

Their enemies are the enemies of humanity, who fight against fate, and rush madly upon the thick losses of Jehovah's buckler; they are doomed to utter and self-destruction.

In such a cause we can well afford to spend and be spnt, to suffer and wait; and the re-enslaved laborers of Louisiana, who prayed and waited so long for freedom in patience possessing their souls, can and will patiently and prayfully wait for the present storm to pass over. They are born Republicans, disciplined by suffering and endurance for service in the army of progress; they may join Democratic clubs, carry protection papers, even vote, if permitted, to suit their oppressors, but let us remember that Gallileo came forth from the inquisition, muttering "it does move," and old Cranmer thrust into the fire the hand which had signed his recantation. If such men faltered in view of the dungeon and the stake, we may well respect the weakness of these colored people in the face of assassination or starvation.

The Planters' Banner tells us very naively that since the establishment of the slave patrol and the late shocking murders, "the negroes are quiet all over St. Mary." It also reports "a great riot at Alexandria, in which five hundred negroes were killed," Of course the negroes are now quiet in that region. Dennett says again: "Most of the negroes now show a disposition to vote the Democratic ticket, and live on friendly terms with the white people."

This man has been branded as the murderer of the amiable and brave Colonel Pope, perhaps he is not more guilty than others for whom he speaks in the following, from his paper of October 31:

Twenty years ago; and even ten years, St. Mary, under the old system, which abolitionists painted in such horrid colors, was an Eden compared to its present situation.

Then our white people were prosperous and happy, and our black people well fed, well cared for, and contented. Our fields smiled, and the autumnal harvests were rich and abundant.

The smoke of a hundred and seventy furnaces, over which a thousand huge sugar kettles foamed and boiled, ascended to greet the blue autmnal skies.

The corn songs of the negroes, the loud laugh, the cheerful voices and happy faces of the colored race, the dance and fiddle at the quarters, were indications, not merely of peace, but of lively enjoyment.

Cheerfulness at the cabins, and hospitality at the house of the planter, were the order of the day all over St. Mary.

Whenever the negro and the white man met on the road, the respectful touching of the hat, the friendly nod and kind voices, showed how kind were the relations that existed between the two races in this delightful and happy land.

These men long for the days of the auction block and bull whip; when upon the great sugar farms of Attakapas, nameless horrors were pepetrated without restraint; when profligacy and every crime, held high carnival up and down the Teche, and "our well fed black people," with fiendish calculation, were worked into sugar, until the cup of iniquity overflowed, and the Almighty made all that Sodom a desolation.

There is not then a greater element of strength for the cause of freedom and justice than the circulation of these Southern journals, and none of them contain more blistering self-condemnation than the Planters' Banner.

Burning, Hanging, Etc.

The following we copy from the Southern Argus and Crisis, published by E. E. Overall, at Crystal Springs, Mississippi. John W. Overall (Mayor Conway's Secretary) being editor-in-chief. From the six columns of this stuff that he publishes, we give but a single extract, or dispatch as he calls it, the rest being similar in spirit and about as hifallutin in its style.:

Second Day.

FIFTH DISPATCH.

NEW ORLEANS, October 27, 1 P. M.—Rioting commenced at twelve o'clock to-day on Orleans street. The negroes were again aggressors, who fired upon unoffending white citizens as they were passing along the street. The alarm soon spread, which drew a large crowd, when the firing became general, to the great discomfort of the deluded negroes. In every instance the negro is made the the victim, when the infernal carpet-baggers deserve, and should receive the punishment inflicted upon Sambo. These vile white wretches and miscreants, who entail misery upon the negro, and then sneak away like cowards and knaves as they are, should be ferreted out and made examples of by hanging and burning at the stake. To get rid of these disturbers of the public peace there is a remedy, and it should be applied at once. Every law-abiding citizen should appoint himself a committee of one to seek out these white villains and bring them to condign punishment. Self-preservation is the first law of nature, and it is due to the lives of women and children now jeopardized by the prowling vagabonds and instigators of riot, assassination and bloodshed, that every man who belongs to the white race and believes in its superiority, should end the wrongs inflicted upon an oppressed people by erecting gallows to stretch their necks and preparing stakes to consume their hellish bodies. Women and children are fleeing to the city from adjoining parishes for protection in the midst of disorder and assassination which prevail to such an alarming extent.

These events are transpiring in the reconstructed State of Louisiana—under the mockery of the world's gaze. The infidels of Republican government, who have usurped the halls of Congress and inflicted upon the Southern States odious laws, should also be brought to the bar of public opinion and required to expiate for the crimes and misdemeanors perpetrated in the name of liberty, It is high time that all this mockery should cease. Better have no government than one of force, fraud and corruption. If outlawry is to exist, let there be no attempt to conceal it by professing that which is not taught by example. The white race of the South—omnipotent by nature, instinct and education, must keep the negro race in subjection or exterminate it and the white carpet-baggers who affiliate with them, a race upon whom God has set the irrevocable seal of inferiority. Let there be an uprising of the multitude for self-defense and constitutional government as transmitted to this generation by the revolutionary fathers of 1776.

It would be very difficult for the editor of the Argus to make even his own friends believe that the negroes were generally, or even frequently, the aggressors. It is easy, however, to believe that they are generally, and nearly always the victims.

Mr. Overall is not backward in giving his opinion concerning those who differ from him in political matters. "They should be ferreted out and made examples of, by hanging and burning at the stake." And every "law-abiding citizen should appoint himself a committee of one" to do this thing. What an absurdity! "Law-abiding citizens" should set all law at defiance and turn butchers and out throats.

When such papers as this and the Planters' Banner, of Franklin, Lovisiana, published by Dennett, who was charge by Mrs. Pope with being the instigator of her husband's murder. When these and other papers are publishing articles like the above, what wonder that scenes of violence and bloodshed are manifest on every hand?

Again, we read in the same paper: A method is proposed to rid the South of carpet-baggers, and if carried out, will prevent those negro insurrections so much to be deplored by every man in the South who belongs legitimately to the white race.

We have no reason to doubt the editor's word, as he is in a position to know of what he is speaking. That it was in the heart of the editor and thousands of others to carry out that "plan," we doubt not. But the Lord sent confusion into their ranks, so that they failed to act in concert. Unforseen circumstances arose. In the city the military force were on the alert. And in both city and country their plans leaked out beforehand. Some could not restrain themselves till the "great day," and the Radical organizations were broken up gradually and their members scattered. No opposition and no excuse could, therefore, be obtained to carry out the "plan" mentioned by the editor. And no one, we judge, is the loser, that it failed in its consummation.

Another Preacher Murdered—A Teacher Beat to Death.

Information reaches us from Natchitoches that Brother Alfred Hazen, one of our local preachers, has fallen a victim to the hate of the cut-throat Democracy, alias the chivalry of that section.

And what was his offense? Simply a difference in political opinion. He had received some Republican tickets for distribution. It was necessary, therefore, that some of the superior (?) race of Southern Democrats show their indignation toward the one who dared to act or think contrary to themselves. He must die. And as he was without firearms to protect himself, they would show that they had the pluck to do the deed. Between midnight and morning of the thirty-first, these valiant men started on their work. They first came across Brother Falkner, the secretary of our church in Natchitoches, and the teacher of the colored school. They put him out of the way by beating. Proceeding to the house of Brother Hazen, they informed him that they intended to burn up him and his family. They then demanded the Republican tickets, which were given them. They again said that they were going to kill them all. Brother Hazen besought them not to kill or hurt his family, but if they desired to kill him, he was ready to die. The miserable fiends then took him out, peaceable, unassuming man that he was, and murdered him in cold blood as they would slaughter a sheep.

Do you ask if the murderers have been arrested? Ask it not, or you will be considered verdant for such an absurd question. As though the life of a Union man, white or black, were of sufficient importance, in the country parishes, to awaken either pity or justice sufficient to call for the issuing of a process against the assassins, or at least toward making any attempt to convict and punish them.

How many more of our ministers have been killed, we can not tell. We have heard from but few charges since election. We know that some were absent from their charges previous to election, but whether dead or simply run off, we have not learned.

Peace in St. Landry.

Nothing could exceed the Pecksniffian blandness with which the "Oily gammon" of the State Senate, from this paragon parish, made the assertion, "Sir, in my parish we have had perfect peace and good order and the best of feeling between the whites and blacks; in fact, Mr. President, quite a respectable number of the negroes, voted for me. My parish is one of the most quiet and law-abiding in the State."

With what an imposing air and a meant to be honest look, the Senator casting his eyes grandly around the circumference of the Senate, resumed his seat.

He perhaps did not dream how soon his innocent laurels were perversely to contradict all his finely rounded sentences.

Shortly after the investigation of the committee on peace and order showed more murders and outrages in St. Landry than any other parish except, perhaps, Franklin, Bossier and Caddo.

Shortly afterward, a Republican editor was beaten, his printing office gutted, and a negro hunt followed, in the course of which, according to the St. Landry papers, between two and three hundred negroes were killed.

No attempt was made to investigate these atrocities, by the people of the parish.

Now two just escaped fugitives from the tender mercies of that lamblike people have just arrived in this city. One is Mr. Bentley, the editor referred to, and the other is Mr. Miller, a resident of the parish.

The history of these gentlemen's vicissitudes bears such a resemblance to so many we have read of during the war in this country, that we almost thought as we heard it, that we were back under the good old "Confederate times." For instance, the civil officers were powerless to protect them; they fled into the fields and woods, were concealed in hollow trees, dwelt in cane brakes, and were hunted by bloodhounds. We will print the particulars soon.

Just read the last paragraph over, and reflect that Republicans are hunted with bloodhounds in St. Landry parish. Mr. Miller simply went back to his parish to distribute Grant and Colfax tickets. They robbed his valise, destroyed his tickets and hunted him with bloodhounds.

Verily our "down-trodden and oppressed" rebel brothers seem not to approve of Grant's motto, "Let us have peace."

Case of the St. Mary Prisoners.

A complaint on the affidavit of Josiah Fisk, Justice of the Fourth Ward of St. Mary parish, having been made before United States Commissioner Warren, charging, upon information received, that Dr. Wood, Donaldson Caffray, Van Vincent, Bailey Vincent, Mike Gordon, George Sanders and George Gravenberg, of the parish of St. Mary, with being concerned, as principals or accessories, in the murder of H. H Pope and Valentine Chase, a warrant was duly issued and placed in the hands of the United States Marshal for the arrest of the accused.

The parties appeared before the Commissioner on Friday, represented by Judge Spofford as counsel.

A demurrer was filed denying the jurisdiction of the Commissioner on several grounds, and the final decision was that the United States Court had not jurisdiction in the case. The prisoners were, therefore, discharged. The case will be sent before the Parish Court. All who know the state of affairs in Western Louisiana, understand this to be equivalent to giving up the case, for no one believes, if all or part should be clearly proved guilty, that a jury, composed of their sympathizers in their parish, would convict them. Or if convicted, it would be only for appearance's sake, and they would be allowed to escape.

How Union People can Live in St. Mary Parish.

Many have been the fugitives from St. Mary parish of late. Not only those who have taken part in political matters, but others of Republican or Union sentiments, who have expressed themselves guardedly, or have even eschewed politics altogether. Women and children are also among the fugitives who no longer feel it safe to remain there. Some have not even stopped here, but started on north as soon as possible, where Democrats freely give to Republicans the right to hold their own opinions, and not only to hold them, but even to express them without assasinating or even threatening them. And where, also, the county papers do not incite violence toward them.

To these fugitives from St. Mary and neighboring parishes who love the climate and soil, and who have left their homes with regret, we have a few words of encouragement.

We have hit upon a plan by which you may still live in these parishes without making a public declaration that you have forsaken all your principles, or that you believe what in reality you do not believe. The plan is this, let all those who have fled from the parish unite and prevailing upon others to join you, make out a band of about fifty families. Purchase a large body of land, enough for all, and in the centre build a fort, with the necessary buildings within the inclosure to accommodate all.

All go there together taking along about one handred rifles or muskets, and the necessary side arms. Also two or three howitzers and a rifled canon with plenty of amunition.

We have no doubt that you can then live in peace and quiet in your chosen homes, and sleep sweetly without having a gang of Seymour Knights, or members of the Ku-Klux prowling about your houses at night to assassin ate you for opinion's sake.

The City Press.

We advise our Northern frinds who wish to keep well informed of the situation here, to carefully preserve files of the Democratic papers of this city. In the light of events which may happen, the running commentary of the press may prove to be very suggestive, should, for instance, it turn out that a thoroughly organized and well armed association of men exists in this State, bound together by the most horrid oaths, whose avowed object is the destruction of the State Government and of all the ends accomplished by national reconstruction, and that this organization should in the next few months essay by overt acts, the fulfillment of its objects, the Northern reader, who may have to sit in judgement upon a new rebellion, will see a remarkable illustration of the relation between design and effect when he contrasts the tone and the advice of the Democratic press of this State with the rise, progress and fall of the new rebellion.

Reserve the files by all means. Let us have the record on these fellows. After the rebellion is crushed, as which it will be, and the authority of the law vindicated, and treason becomes odious, some of these gentlemen will forget that they ever had any part in it.

We copy the following from the editorial columns of the New Orleans Times:

The carpet-baggers are in no danger of losing the chief material for their denunciation of our people. The "hellish treason" of opposing their various schemes of plunder, oppression and usurpation—the rebelliousness which demands that the constitution and laws shall be enforced and the cardinal principles of republican liberty maintained, is still rife in the South, and especially in this State.

This "treason and rebelliousness" demand:

1. That the laws passed by the last Legislature, through corruption, shall be set aside.

2. That the men who assisted in passing laws to create fat offices which are to be upheld by the taxes extorted from the people, shall not fill those offices; that the provision of the constitution which prohibits the holding of more than one civil office in the State shall be enforced; that the Lieutenant Governor is not competent to fill the office of Lieutenant Governor at $5000, and that of President of the Police Board at $3000 per annum; that A. L. Lee is not competent to fill the several offices of Representative from St. Bernard, drawing from the State Treasury for his services ten dollars a day, and that of State and City Printer, at a cost of $100,000 for the city, and $300,000 for the State, and also that of Commissioner to sell two millions of levee bonds for an indefinite and illimitable consideration, which latter offices were created while said Lee was a member of the Legislature, and which he can not hold without violating the 41st article of the constitution, which provides that "no Senator or Representative, during the term for which he was elected, nor for one year thereafter, shall be appointed to any civil office of profit under this State, which shall have been created or the emoluments of which have been increased during the time such Senator or Representative was in office."

These are only a few specimen bricks of the general system of lawlessness, utter disregard of the constitution, and unscrupulous plundering which demand a combined resistance by our people. The iniquitous government which has been saddled upon this State without the consent of its people, has no claim to constitutional respect, and should be utterly extirpated.

The Times need not have the slightest fear of being accused of "treason and rebellion" by any honest Republicans for exposing any wrong perpetrated by that party. On the contrary they will meet with approval. If the Lieut. Governor or Mr. Lee or any other man, is holding two offices, contrary to the constitution of the State, as is claimed above, we will not only refrain from censuring the Times for showing up in the strongest light the illegality of such acts, but will join them in such denunciation.

Wrong is wrong, and right is right, with us, no matter in what party it may be found.

But whatever may be their tendencies for "unscrupulous plundering," we can not deny that they are the legislature, and that in the main they were elected by the majority of the people.

The Times must not forget that colored men, as well as white men, are now "people." If their votes in some cases, are controlled by bad men, it is simply because those men stand up for their civil and political rights. Let the Times and the party of which it is the advocate, do the same, cease all efforts to deprive them of suffrage, and declare in favor of their rights in this regard, and they may then hope peacably to control their votes.

They will then not have to be harping about a "carpet-bag" legislature.

WHEN I AM POPE.—Mr. Bonner, when I am Pope, I propose some new articles of faith:

1. Every man shall be married at the age of twenty-five, or show good cause for neglect of duty.

2. Every man shall annually tax himself one-tenth of his income, until the sum reaches the amount of —— to procure books, journals and newspapers.

3. Wedding gifts shall never consist of luxuries—jewels, plate, etc.—but of books, and, with the birth of every child, ten volumes shall be put into the library in his name.

4. It shall be the duty of every young married man to read aloud to his wife, at least one hour a day, for the first ten years after his marriage. But this shall not be construed to the prejudice of the wife's right to read, speak, lecture, etc.

5. All men who lie by their books in a self-indulgent and hidden manner, absorbing knowledge without benefit to their fellows, shall be treated as bees that hide their nests—smoked out, and their nests broken up!

However, I will not tell you what other laws I shall promulgate, for fear I shall lose votes and fail of becoming Pope.—H. W. Beecher.

Negro Supremacy.

Charles Sumner said the other day that he would like to see a half dozen of those broad chested, strong limbed Southern planters who are trembling with snch frantic terror at the idea of being held in subjection by the inferior, uneducated negro. Charles, you must not take it for granted that these people mean exactly every word they say, they have never been particularly remarkable for this since the days of John C. Calhoun (see John Minor Botts history of the late war). These gentlemen are not so much afraid of negro supremacy as of losing their own supremacy. Negro supremacy however, is a good war-cry just now like all other war-cries which are humbugs, it can only serve your purpose when your party is in the majority.

When it is in the minority their fallacy once exposed they recoil upon their inventors.

The Republican party and Congress will never believe that the 90,000 white men of Louisiana completely armed and organized are frightened to death by the 80,000 unarmed negroes.

Your protest will not do. The real fact is, your design is to overthrow the results of Congressional reconstruction. This is a continuation of the same old war. It will so be viewed and it will so be crushed.

RELIGIOUS SERVICES will be held in Dr. Newman's Church, on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock, and in the chapel on Sunday evening at seven o'clock.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—Rev. J. W. Healy, of the Tabernacle church of Chicago, has assumed the permanent pastorate of the First Congregational Church of this city. His text next Sabbath morning will be "Launch out into the deep." In the evening he will commence a series of Sabbath evening discourses on "Home Life, its Relations and Duties." Strangers are cordially invited.

FUGITIVES.—We have interesting accounts of the escape of fugitives rom the interior parishes, which we will endeavor to publish next week.

Some of these are as thrilling as the escape of prisoners from the wild savages during the early history of our country. One of these fugitives was two or three weeks in the swamps and forests, before he succeeded in making his way to the Mississippi river, where he could take passage to the city.

THE KILLED IN OPELOUSAS.—Recent reports from Opelousas in regard to the number of negroes killed there a few weeks since, when mob law held sway, make it, instead of one hundred as reported in the New Orleans Times, nearer two hundred, though the exact number will probably never be known.

We think of the Democrats, alias the "law abiding," there were some two or three killed.

TO OUR PREACHERS.—Some of our preachers were not on their charges in Western Louisiana, for some days previous to the election, nor did we know where they were, whether living or dead.

We desire that all who see this notice will write, if they have not already written since election, so that we may know if any have been killed, and charges thereby left unsupplied.

Rev. Dr. Newman, the editor of the ADVOCATE, left this city for the North the first of the week, to attend the annual meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Church Extension society, to be held in Philadelphia, on the nineteenth instant. He will return soon.

BURNETT'S STANDARD PREPARATIONS.—For more than eight years Burnett's toilet preparations and cooking extracts have maintained a large and constantly increasing sale, sustaining the opinion of the best judges that they are unrivaled. Salesroom, 592 Broadway, New York, and sold by all reputable dealers.

Revival Items.

Rev. A. W. Gibson writes from Duncannon, Central Pennsylvania Conference, October 13: "This village has been the scene of a very remarkable work of grace the last three weeks. Over thirty souls have been converted; all adults, and some of them aged Twenty-eight have given their names to the Church that brought them to Christ. The work of "entire sanctification" has been progressing in the Church for the last two months, and quite a number have entered into the enjoyment of that state of grace. Our special meetings for the perfecting of believers have been attended with special manifestations of the Divine power and glory. As a result of this quickening and purifying of the Church, penitents coming to the altar were speedily converted, and but one out of more than thirty seekers remains without the blessing."

At the camp meeting which recently closed on Falls City Circuit, Nebraska, about fifty conversions were reported.

A series of revival meetings commenced September 20, at Monrovia, Kansas, and, continuing eleven days, resulted in twenty conversions and as many accessions to the Church.

Matawan charge, New Jersey Conference, Rev. M. Relyea, pastor, is now enjoying a precious revival. During the past two or three weeks over thirty have professed conversion, and twenty-nine have united with the Church.

From Mississippi.

VICKSBURG, November 9, 1868.

MR. EDITOR:

The joy manifested by the colored people of this State, in view of the election of General Grant, is indescribable, it breaks forth in their singing and praying as well as in constant conversation. The effect on the whites, who were almost unanimous in their support of Seymour, is marvelous. Indeed, so far as they are concerned, the election of Grant was like the voice of the Savior saying, "Peace be still," changing a raging, destructive storm to a gentle calm. The hand of Divine Providence is seen in the election of General Grant, which is nothing more or less than that a majority in this nation flings to the breeze a sacred banner on which is inscribed, "Equal rights for all men." Whether General Grant shall lead the progressive, elevated sentiment of the nation or not, his election is a triumph, inasmuch as the issue on which he was elected was civil and political equality for the colored man, all other issues in the canvass were but as the rivers to the ocean. But Grant will sustain the expectations of the friends of human rights, not because of his special sympathy for the colored race; for of this he has but little, not becaue the Radical leaders will influence him, for the man who made, in time of war, one of the most important military movements known to history, against the advice of Generals Sherman, Howard, Logan and Thomas, will not be trammeled by advisers, in administering the affairs of government in times of peace. Our faith in General Grant comes from the inexorable logic by which he is governed. His reasoning powers, rising in the sublimity of genius, control his acts, and as he has taken for his basis the Constitution of the United States, as interpreted by the declaration of independence, he will work out as far as it is his duty, so to do the legitimate result thereof. General Grant will push forward in the solution of what appears to be political problems, just as the mathematician does in geometry, recognizing correct principles, regardless of results. If Grant did less than this, he would be the merest pigmy that ever sat in the White House, for in this lies the secret of his power that has made him the wonder of the age. His military career ablaze with the triumph of successive victories, sustains this view of his character. From Grant we turn to the churches.

ENTERPRISE.

Our quarterly meeting was held at Enterprise, October 24. Rev. Owen Jones, though having much sickness in his family, had been holding a protracted meeting, and we had reason to praise the Lord for great results. All the services were well attended. The children's meeting on Sunday morning was the occasion of a very large assemblage. They were examined by the presiding elder in Bible and Catechism, and then addressed by him and the Hon. H. Musgrove. The communion service was attended with overwhelmed power. Enterprise circuit has increased largely in membership. The day school continues to be well attended.

JACKSON.

Quarterly meeting was held at Jackson, October 31 and November 1. We held the Brandon and Jackson Quarterly Conferences together. Quite an increase was reported in the Jackson charge. Democracy, for a time, made an inroad on Rev. Thomas Anderson's charge but the ground has been regained and more added. Matters are moving on encouragingly, notwithstanding the fierce opposition inspired by the over zealous Democracy. The Brandon circuit, in charge of Rev. Miles Proctor, has been blessed with great revivals and increase of membership. The trials of the people increased their faithfulness, and right nobly have the members of the "old mother church" stood up. Rev. Moses Adams, pastor of Jackson church, reported a large increase, and hopes to finish the parsonage before conference. A new circuit of over two hundred and fifty members, embracing Scott county, was represented in the quarterly conference, by Brother Joseph Moore.

Meetings on Sunday were gratifying. The church seemed greatly refreshed. The children's meeting at night was a novelty to the people, and I think as equally profitable. Sister Carrie Highgate had prepared them for the occasion, and their recitations of Scriptures, ten commandments, religious pieces, and their singing was grand, and would have done credit to a Northern Sabbath school. The presiding elder and one of the editors of the Pilot, Fisher, delivered addresses. The house was crowded, and the people were deeply interested. Our people in Jackson are a willing people, though they are somewhat embarrassed by poverty. No community in the State is growing more rapidly in intelligence.

VICKSBURG.

Quarterly meeting commenced here Friday evening, November 6. I find the charge in an enthusiastic condition, and Brother Baker's reports were highly satisfactory. We had a very noisy time—a little too much so. On Sunday night the house was literally packed, and the shouting reached a point that called for rebuke. In the afternoon Rev. Mr. Bardwell, superintendent of the American Missionary Association, assisted in administering the sacrament. A collection of twenty dollars was taken up for Brother Baker.

OUR ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

We had earnestly hoped to have the conference meet at Jackson, but as it is probable that the constitutional convention may be reassembled at that time, it might take away from the comfort and impression of the conference, as Jackson has limited accommodations for strangers. The conference will, therefore, be held at Canton, and every preparation will be made to give the preachers goods beds and plenty to eat for a few days. Our conference will be attended by not less than three hundred of our lay members as visitors; they will come from different parts of the State.

VISIT TO HOLLY SPRINGS.

I left Jackson for Holly Springs, on Monday, November 2, at 3 A. M., had a joyful meeting with Rev. A. C. McDonald, presiding elder of Holly Springs district, found him in good spirits and tolerably well situated, though compelled to pay exhorbitant rent, preached Monday and Tuesday night. Our church at Holly Springs is the largest in the State, I think, and is prosperous. Brother Johnson, preacher in charge, has been useful. I found that Brother McDonald's trials had been much like my own, and we joined in praising God for victory. Wednesday night, preached at Durant; the people turned out largely; some had come fifteen miles. Thursday night, preached at Canton, and found a revival in progress. Friday morning, left for Vicksburg. The next quarterly meeting is at Yazoo City, commencing on Thursday evening next.

REV. J. P. NEWMAN, D. D.

I have pressed earnestly upon Dr. Newman our need of means to build churches, particularly at Vicksburg, Brandon, Shuqulak, and other places, and as I understand he has gone North to meet the committee of the Church Extension Society, of which he is a member, I hope he will be successful in his appeals. At Vicksburg we must have a good church.

JAMES LYNC
Presiding Elder Jackson District.

Washington Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, November 5.

The old "Foundry" church, as we intimated last week, has been the scene of more than usual Sunday school interest. The committee appointed for that purpose had arranged for a Sunday School Institute; the exercises to consist in addresses, lessons on the blackboard, recitations by some of the classes connected with the different schools of this city and Georgetown; thus exhibiting the different modes of conducting the schools, by their superintendents and teachers of Bible classes; in many of these remarkable tact and intelligence were displayed. The addresses were such as the occasion called for, clear, pointed and stirring, and participated in by Mr. Wysong, of Baltimore Rev. Alfred Taylor, of Philadelphia, Rev. Mr. Vincent, of New York, Dr. McCauley, and others. To Mr. Vincent was assigned a heavier part than to others, owing to his relation to the great Sunday school interest of the Methodist Church. His sermon on Sunday morning, as well as the one at night, were able and heard with great attention by the people. The whole weeks' service was of a character not to be forgotten. The inclement weather prevailing part of the time, and especially Sunday morning, did not abate the interest in these edifying services. The collection for the Sunday School Union was $131; this sum is exclusive of the amount raised to defray the expenses of the institute.

The revival in McKendry church is still in progress; the congregations are large and serious; more present themselves for prayers than can kneel at the altar; the young converts are very active and successful among their associates in persuading them to break off their sins by righteousness, and turn to God. "Angels strike their harps of gold," while viewing such a scene. The blooming youth and heads of families are the subjects of this gracious work.

At East Washington charge eighty-five persons have been received as the fruit of their recent revival. That venerable parent of all the Methodist churches in the District of Columbia, does not impair by age; an enlargement of her borders is just now being made by the building of a church of suitable size, for public service and Sunday school. This will afford a fine field for a new colony of zealous workers under the direction of the old station. A pleasing feature in their new enterprise is—they have considerably more ground than is needed for the church to stand on; this is an exception to the rule with Methodist people; nor do they seem to learn otherwise, though the errors of a century ought to instruct them.

The Advocate of to-day spreads before us the closing scene of that lovely young woman, Mrs. Captain Adams. What glory gilds the last hours of a life devoted to Christ! How contemptible are all the splendors of this world compared with the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory which is the inheritance of faith! We well remember that cheerful face, seen no more here, but radiant with the blessed of God. We wept with the heart-smittten friends, but give audience to the voice from the excellent glory—"be still and know that I am God!"

Intelligence from Our Mission Rooms.

MISSIONARY ADVOCATE.—The contents for November: Africa, a Christian Hero; China, a Letter from L. N. Wheeler; India, Zenana schools, Religion of the Hindoos, by J. T. Scott, and At Home in Heaven, by Mrs. E. J. Humphrey; South America and Mexico, The Bible and Colporteurs in that Field; The Week of Prayer; Missionary Charge, Schureman Halsted's decease. Domestic Missions—Do not omit the item on Church Building under this head; Indian Missions in Wisconsin and in Michigan; Foreign Populations; Lights and Shadows in the District of a German Elder. Read the story of a Little Child shall Lead Them. Ladies' Department—Social Position of Women in India. Seamen's Department. Read all and the statistics.

INDIA.—An earnest and well-founded call comes to us from India. It is in a letter from Rev. J. M. Thoburn, just received at the Mission Rooms, dated September 11, 1868. It is in accordance with the general tenor of our letters from India, and announces great prosperity in our missions in the Moradabad district and vicinity. Indeed, it amounts to a true evangelical revival, and is wide-spread. The Church ought to show herself ready and willing to measure up to this great demand for aid. God is pouring out his spirit on our missions in India. Brother Thoburn says: "At present we have more applicants for baptism than we have had at any time since our work was commenced. It is just ten years since our work was fairly opened, and we have more than six hundred communicants on our Church registers. In the history of missions to the heathen it is rarely that such a record can be found. The first ten years are usually spent in preparatory work. If we are faithful, and if the Board sustains us, what may we not hope for during the next decade? Give us a few more good men, and our hearts and hands will be greatly strengthened. I have often thought that the presence of a good colleague here this year would have added from twenty-five to fifty to the baptisms of the year. For instance, a village forty miles distant has been calling for some one to baptize and organize a class among them: but I cannot find time to go and examine them and see what should be done for them. Delay in such cases is usually fatal, as the hostile neighbors are almost sure to spoil the work in some way. When once baptized they are usually given up as lost."

GERMANY.—A letter received at the Mission Rooms from Rev. J. F. Hurst, D. D., Professor in the Martin Mission Institute, dated at Frankfort, Oct. 8, advises us that the new Martin Mission Institute was finished, but it was not deemed advisable to occupy it till next spring, as it is not thoroughly dry. Dr. Hurst says of the Institute:

As to the edifice and the whole property there is but one opinion—that the location is as eligible as anywhere in Frankfort, or in any other German city. It is on high ground, and overlooks the city and the country for many miles around. The universal testimony is, that cheaper property could not have been found anywhere. We bought the lots and built when property in Frankfort was very low, owing to the annexation of the city to Prussia.

Dr. Hurst has under consideration the question of establishing an English service in Frankfort, chiefly for the benefit of Americans passing through or sojourning in the city for a time. He advised the rector of the English Church there of his project, and he became very indignant upon the announcement. The matter is held under advisement.

SWEDEN.—Brother Witting, our superintendent in Sweden, in writing to the Mission Room, says: "Since I have been here, scarcely a year, I have preached about three hundred sermons, conducted about one hundred and forty prayer and class meetings, superintended the Sunday-school at Gottenburg, and traveled about 5000 miles by land and water. One year ago we had but one small society and one Sunday-school; now we have seven societies, seven missionaries, fifteen regular appointments, 424 members, five Sunday-schools, thirty-four officers and teachers, and 354 children. We have collected $108 missionary money, $48 for the Sunday-school, and about $392 for general current expenses of the mission." Surely these people are worthy of support.

The new Queen of Madagascar has abolished idol worship, and openly declared her contempt for the idols and their priests. The Queen herself has not yet espoused Christianity, but the impetus given to the work of conversion is reported to be such that "the Christian churches can not contain the crowds who flock to hear the Gospel."

The Moravian missionaries have penetrated seven hundred miles into the interior of Australia, among the aborigines. The natives here are a more vigorous race than those found further south, being tall and very savage. They are said to be fond of human flesh, and often kill their children for the sake of eating them. Their conduct toward the missionaries was at first very friendly. Toward the end of May, however, there was a sudden change in the demeanor of the savages, probably owing to the influence of other tribes. The lives of the brethren were seriously threatened, and the timely arrival of some police-soldiers alone saved them from a horrible death.

A man living in the activities of the nineteenth century is a condensed Methuselah.

Ladies are like watches—pretty enough to look at—sweet face and delicate hands, but somewhat difficult to regulate when once started agoing.

"I say, Mr. Pilot, ain't you going to start soon?" said a nervous traveler on a steamboat lying to during a fog. "As soon as the fog clears up," replied the captain, "Well, it's starlight now overhead," said the man. "Oh, yes; but we are not going that way."

PASSING AWAY.—Our slip from the Mission Rooms says. "Joseph Fieldbrave, an excellent preacher and a good man; and Emma Janvier, first native member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India. She was the wife of our first native preacher, and was singing with her latest breath."

"Tommy, my son, what in the world are you going to do with that club?" "Send it to the editor, of course." "But what are you going to send it to the editor for?" "Well, 'cause he says if anybody sends him a club, he will send him a copy of his paper."

An Ohio school girl went through her calisthenic exercises at home for the amusement of the children. A youthful visitor, with interest and pity on her countenance, asked her brother "if that gal had fits?" "No," replied the lad, contemptuously, "that's gymnastics." "Oh, 'tis, hey!" said verdant, "how long has she had 'em?"

Cardinal de Salis, who died 1785, aged 110 years, said: "By being old when I was young, I find myself young now I am old. I led a sober and studious, but not a lazy or sedentary life. My diet was sparing though delicate; I rode or walked every day, except in rainy weather, when I exercised within doors for a couple of hours. So far I took care of the body; and as to the mind, endeavored to preserve it in due temper by a scrupulous obedience to divine commands. By these means I have arrived at the age of a patriarch, with less injury to my health and constitution than many experience at forty.

GENTLEMEN—Your Committee on Elections and Qualifications, to whom was submitted the case of St. Landry parish, wherein Theophile Simms, Starville Prejean, N. Douglass, and Theodore Castille contest the seats of O. Tate, A. Dupre, M. D. Kavanagh and Willis Prescott as Representatives, respectfully represent to your honorable body that after examination of evidence presented they do report:

SPECIAL COMMITTEES.

Mr. Packard, from the special committee on slaughter houses, reported as follows:

To the Honorable President and Members of the Senate:

Your special committee, to whom was referred the bill entitled an act to provide for the inspection of live stock and to prevent the sale of diseased meats in the parishes of Orleans and Jefferson, have had the same under consideration and report unfavorably thereon for the following reasons:

The bill in its general features lacks very many points of protection to the public, which are essential to bills of this character. It has carefully taken care to protect the inspector against any prosecution for malfeasance in office, and says he shall receive ten cents for cattle and five cents for hogs, sheep and goats, and fails to provide any bond for said inspector to give for the faithful performance of his duties, but confers upon him the arbitrary control of the entire slaughtering business of the aforesaid parishes. Your committee are of the opinion that the enactment of this law would endanger more lives by starvation than it would save from eating diseased meats.

The bill proposes to confer upon one single individual the arbitrary, entire and exclusive right, at his personal convenience, to decide, after due examination, what animals shall be slaughtered and what not. At first thought the scheme appears to have many things in its favor. But when the whole subject is considered carefully, it will be seen that there is nothing in the bill to prevent the said inspector from condemning three-fourths of the entire cattle, hogs sheep and goats that are brought into the aforesaid parishes for sale, and compelling the brokers, agents or owners thereof to pay him any price he may demand, to allow them to slaughter, and offer for sale said animals, which would have the very unfavorable effect of raising the price of provisions; and, by the way the community whom we are here to represent must be the sufferers, they having to pay the extra expense when they go to market.

Your committee have read this bill in every possible way that it could be read, and have put the most favorable construction upon the same, with a view of determining the advantages it might result in to the community and have come to the conclusion that there is but one individual whom it will benefit, and that is the inspector. Your committee would respectfully recommend that the further consideration of this bill be indefinitely postponed.

C. C. PACKARD,
SAM. M. TODD,
T. V. COUPLAND.

RESOLUTIONS.

The majority report of the Committee on Elections and Returns was taken up and read as follows:

CONCLUSIONS OF THE COMMITTEE.—After mature deliberation and a careful review of the evidence submitted to them in the case of C. C. Antoine, who contests the right of Hon. Reuben White to his seat in the Senate of the State of Louisiana, from the Twenty-first Senatorial District, your committee are of the opinion that Mr. White is clearly disfranchised under the provisions of the fourteenth article known as the Constitutional amendment of the Constitution of the United States, for the reason that he was a member of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana prior to January 26, 1861, and his continuing to act in said Legislature while it was under the jurisdiction of the so-called Confederate States; and for the further reason that he otherwise rendered aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States government after having taken the oath to support the Constitution of the United States and obey the laws thereof. Therefore Mr. White is considered ineligible to hold any office whatever until relieved from his disability by the Congress of the United States, and your committee respectfully recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That Reuben White is ineligible to his seat as Senator from the Twenty-first Senatorial District of the State of Louisiana for the reasons set forth in this report, and that his seat be declared vacant; and be it further

Resolved, That C. C. Antoine be permitted to appear before your committee and establish his right to a seat in your honorable body, in accordance with his petition and the petition of other votersin the Twenty-first Senatorial District, that he may receive full justice and relief in the premises.

COMMITTEE ROOMS, September 14, 1868.

To the Honorable Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives:

Your Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of the African Methodist Episcopal Church as an incorporated body, for relief or aid on account of the great pecuniary loss, amounting to nearly fifteen thousand dollars, which was sustained by them by the enforcement of illegal and unwarranted ordinances passed by the City Council of New Orleans, April 7, 1858, beg leave to report that it appears by evidence which fully establishes the fact that the African Methodist Episcopal Church was legally incorporated by virtue of an act of the Legislature of Louisiana, approved April 30, 1847, and that said church complied in all respects with the requirements and provisions of said act, and by virtue of the rights and privileges which it granted, did acquire legal vested rights and title to real and personal property in the city of New Orleans amounting in value to twenty-two thousand dollars, and were using the same for the purpose of worshiping God, (for which it was acquired), in a peaceable and Christian-like manner, and while thus engaged the City Council of New Orleans passed ordinances, and in pursuance of which the rights and privileges of the church were infringed upon in the most outrageous and illegal manner. The city took possession of the property of the church and subjected its members to gross indignities and heavy fines. During the year 1858, and afterward, the prejudice and sentiments of the citizens of Louisiana were so strongly opposed to granting or defending any rights and privileges to persons of color that learned judges of the Supreme Court expressed opinions that negroes were not persons in legal sense; it was therefore impossible to obtain any redress by law for the wrongs above recited, until by lapse of time they were debarred by prescription from appealing to the courts. And notwithstanding your committee are fully aware of the present unfavorable financial condition of the State, they are compelled to consider the impoverished and needy condition of this church, caused by such wrongs, as a matter which should receive the favorable attention of the Legislature, and believing as we do that said church is eminently instrumental in promoting the good morals and peaceable conduct of a large number in this community, we therefore respectfully recommend that the State give partial relief for the loss sustained by the passage of the following act.

J. H. McVEAN,
Chairman.

The bill entitled an act for the relief of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, of New Orleans, was placed on its first and second readings and referred to the Committee of the Whole.
